Preface.

WHEN these few lines are in the hands of the readers of S. & D. N. & Q. their Magazine will have reached the completion of its 6th volume, and the 12th year of its existence.

The life of a local magazine is a precarious one, depending as it does upon a restricted circle of readers, and the Editors rejoice that they have been able to steer their barque so long upon a successful voyage. They must repeat, however, what they have said on a former occasion, that they require a constant accession of fresh subscribers to take the place of those whom the inroads of time have removed. The commencement of a new century, coinciding with that of a new volume, seems to give an opportunity of enlistment, which lovers of Somerset and Dorset would do well to embrace, and the Editors desire to express the hope that increased support, both within the two counties and out of them, may be forthcoming with the New Year.

They beg to thank their subscribers and correspondents for the many interesting communications which have been contributed in the past two years, and they hope to receive as many more in the future.

I. NOTES ON THE MILTON ABBEY TABERNACLE.

Attached to the west wall of the south transept of the Benedictine Church at Milton Abbas is a tall wooden tabernacle of the fifteenth century, of elaborate workmanship; a photograph of which has already been reproduced in The Somerset and Dorset Notes and Queries (Vol. V. Part xxxv, p. 97).

Apparently the earliest notice which we have of this tabernacle is in the first edition of Hutchins' History and Antiquities of the County of Dorset (Lond. 1774. pp. 445, 446), wherein it is stated that "on the W. wall" of the south transept "hangs a noble model in wood of a very high octagon spire. Perhaps such a one was intended to be placed on the tower, had not the dissolution prevented it." But the author has already said (p. 442,) that "on the N. wall" of the chancel "hangs a very ancient model of a spire, perhaps the ancient one of this church." Wharton also in 1781 having stated that "in the transept is hung up an old original model in wood of an intended spire, with rich mouldings, in the florid Gothic," goes on to say that "a bit of another model of the same hangs up near the altar." (ib. Second Edition, Lond. 1815. Vol. IV. p. 230, and the Third Edition, Westminster, 1872, p. 404). What the second ornament was it is impossible to say with any certainty, since there is apparently no other record, nor trace of it, but these two descriptions of the eighteenth century; and they are so loose (e.g., the tabernacle which still remains is described as an octagon, though it is in fact a square with a hexagon upon it), that we cannot rely much upon them. Yet, if from the first we may gather that it was earlier in date, and from the second that it looked like a part of the tabernacle which still survives, we are at once reminded of the ornament which is preserved in a similar position in the quire of the Benedictine Church at Tewkesbury, to which I shall refer. But it must not be forgotten that the north side of the chancel near to the high altar was the normal position for two of the regular ornaments of the Church, viz., the image of the patron saint and the Easter sepulchre. An example of the former is to be found in the famous description by Roger Martyn of Long Melford Church, where, "at the north end" of the high altar, "there was a goodly tilt tabernacle, reaching up to the roof of the church, in the which there was a large fair gilt image of 'The Holy Trinity' being patron of the church, besides other fair images. The like Tabernacle was at the south end." (E. Lauriston Conder. Church of the Holy Trinity, Long Melford, Suffolk. Lond. 1887, p. 78.) Thus the tabernacle for the patron saint, if not some part of the sepulchre which was often a moveable structure, might as likely be taken for the model of a church spire as the existing ornament was taken for one. The sacring bell may also have been upon the north side, but the usual arrangements for it are less likely to be so mistaken. Again there are two ancient steeple-shaped tabernacles which are preserved, the one at the Roman Catholic College at Oscott and the other at Rouen in Normandy. They deserve a careful comparison with the surviving Milton ornament, but the general impression which a recollection of them leaves is that they are both very similar to each other and of much the same size and form as the Milton tabernacle, but lighter and much more open. They appear to have been nothing more nor less than reliquaries and to show no signs of having been suspended. It is possible that the missing ornament of Milton Abbey was a reliquary like one of these, but whatever is suggested about it must remain pure speculation.

It is sufficiently difficult to determine what the existing tabernacle at Milton was originally made for. The explanation of it as a model gave place to the belief that it was a hanging shrine for the Eucharist. It is well known that in England the Sacrament for the communion of the sick and dying was always reserved in a pix, or tabernacle, suspended beneath a canopy over the high altar. Lyndewode, the English canonist of the fifteenth century, in commenting on Archbishop Peccham's decree of 1280 (Provinciale Wilhelmi Lyndewode. Paris, 1505, Liber III, fol. 135, verso), speaks of the practice as the "consuetudo anglicana" and though he seems to consider that it does not fulfil the intention of the decree, he knows no exception to the use, and commends it in that it places the Eucharist in the most dignified and prominent position, while, on the other hand, he contrasts it unfavourably with the stone sacrament houses which he has seen abroad, inasmuch as under the condition of things existing in his day, the latter afforded greater security. There is, besides, a universal witness of all contemporary writings and pictures to this custom, with no exceptions of any definiteness until 1547, when there is an apparently solitary instance of "a little coffer upon the hie altar, for to set in the Sacrament." The churchwardens' accounts of St. Margaret's, Westminster, in which this item occurs, shew sufficiently that the change was made by the influence of the Court, and not by the authority of Parliament as required by the ornaments rubric of The Book of Common Prayer. But in the next reign, under the influence of Cardinal Pole, the hanging tabernacle was doubtless in many cases superseded by the fixed locker. In small and remote churches, e.g. in Lincolnshire (See Ed. Peacock English Church Furniture. Lond. 1866.) the change was never made: but whether in this case the hanging tabernacle was displaced in Queen Mary's or Queen Elizabeth's reign, or before, there is no reason to suppose that Milton was an exception to other English Benedictine Churches which at the time of their dissolution possessed magnificent hanging tabernacles like those described at Durham, or drawn in the roll of Abbot Islip at Westminster, or hinted at by the projecting stone canopies of the altar screens at Winchester and St. Albans.

But the opinion that the surviving tabernacle at Milton Abbey was once used for this purpose has, however, lately been disputed. In a note in the first Alcuin Club Tract (J. T. Micklethwaite. The Ornaments of the Rubric. Lond. 1897, p. 36. See also p. 5, though the note in question did not come under the consideration of the Committee) the author describes the ornament as "a tall turret of open woodwork," and he goes on to say "There are remains of clockwork inside and I have little doubt that it is the case for a set of chimes, such as existed at Bury. There is a like turret against the north wall of the presbytery in the Abbey Church of Tewkesbury." My colleague on the committee of the Alcuin Club may have good reasons for this opinion, but he has not given them, nor does he say what the chimes at Bury, or their case, were like, while a reference to the photograph of the Milton ornament will show that the description of it as a "turret of open woodwork" is scarcely happy, and that in this very important point, as well as in other respects, it is not like the Tewkesbury ornament. In the absence of any explanation of Mr. Micklethwaite's interpretation of the ornament, and until some further evidence may be forthcoming, I venture to suggest that the two theories can be reconciled, for there seems good reason to suppose that the ornament has at one time been used for a bell or chimes, but not less certainly does it appear that it was not originally made for this purpose.

To support this opinion there is, first, the witness of the ornament itself, which may be described as a structure of painted wood in four stories, three of which have perpendicular sides and corner buttresses terminating in pinnacles, the story above being set within the pinnacles of the story beneath, and the fourth and highest story being itself a larger pinnacle, or steeple, of which the summit is broken away; the whole height of what remains being about 9ft. $2\frac{3}{4}$ ins. Now of these four stories only the bottom one is in any way open, and even it, as seen from the front, has every appearance of being a completely closed chamber. The sides of the hexagonal steeple between the crockets are plain, but the next two stories are each decorated with tracery laboriously carved on five of the six sides, instead of being pierced through, and the remaining side next the wall is cieled with a plain panel. The lowest story is 1ft. $3\frac{3}{4}$ ins. square on plan and 2ft. high, and has four pinnacles based on roses, and a bottom panel decorated with an intricate pattern of interlacing ribands $\frac{1}{2}$ in. in thickness, the interstices of which are cut through, all but the middle and largest space which is left in the solid panel unpierced. Three of the sides of the bottom story are also decorated with arcading carved on the surface of the panels in a similar manner to the sides of the stories above; but on the south side the tracery in the head of the arcading, and the two top openings of it, only, on the opposite panel, have been at sometime cut through, while nothing is pierced on the front panel, as if it had been an afterthought to cut any of it. At the back there is no panel, but the space within the frame is 1ft. 6in. high, and 11 $\frac{5}{8}$ in. wide, and within this space two boards, $\frac{3}{4}$ in. thick and $2\frac{3}{4}$ in. wide, are fixed at each side, nearly flush with the face of the frame; and these boards are cut out so as to leave an opening between them, shaped like an oval, 9 $\frac{5}{8}$ ins. wide across the middle, with a neck at the top and bottom 5in. wide and $2\frac{3}{4}$ in. deep. This opening is very suggestive. For a pix of the ordinary shape and size could easily be passed through it, either to hang, or to stand, within it. (See an English miniature in Lydgate's Life of St. Edmund, British Museum, Harl. MSS., No. 2,278, fol. 53., in which the pix is shewn hanging under a triple crown in a transparent bag). This completes the account of the actual fabric of the tabernacle, and so far it is clear enough. But there is set within it a rough frame of ten light pieces of wood, viz., six upright pieces and four rails. Four of the upright pieces are on a line with each other, towards the front of the loose frame, but the two inner ones, being wider, project beyond the others. The face of these is about $2\frac{1}{4}$ ins. from the face of the opening and 11 $\frac{3}{4}$ in. from the inside of the front panel of the tabernacle, and they are only $5\frac{3}{8}$ in. apart. They are curved at the back from 3in. to about 2in. at the top and bottom, and notched out in the deepest part so as to lodge some kind of rod midway between the top and bottom rails, which are 1ft. $2\frac{1}{2}$ in. apart; and the openings where the rod would rest are protected by a little copper plate nailed to the inner side of each. It would be difficult to explain this frame in connexion with the pix; while, taken by itself, it seems entirely to justify the opinion that it carried a bell, or wheel. Yet if, on the evidence of this frame, we accept the ornament as having been made for a bell cote, it then becomes extremely difficult to account for the construction of the main fabric.

DIAGRAMS SHEWING THE LOOSE FRAME WITHIN THE TABERNACLE AT MILTON ABBEY.

ELEVATION OF THE BACK OF THE TABERNACLE, SHEWING THE FRAME INSIDE.

SECTION FROM FRONT TO BACK.

SECTION FROM SIDE TO SIDE.

For the frame is nowhere attached to the structure of the tabernacle, but stands loosely inside it, and so that the projecting ends nearly touch the side panels, and it is kept in its place by the above-mentioned boards (which must therefore have been removed, or else never fixed until the frame was inserted), and though the bottle-shaped opening left by these boards does not interfere with the frame, it seems to have no further relation to it. It would also be very strange if the bottom panel, being the slightest part of the whole structure, had been originally intended to do all the work of carrying the bell frame which now rests entirely upon it.

Thus it does not seem likely, from the evidence which the ornament itself supplies, that the tabernacle was made for the bell frame. And if, secondly, we turn to known examples of boxes for sacring bells, this evidence is confirmed. Mr. G. E. Street gives a figure of one of them, at Gerona, (Gothic Architecture in Spain. Lond. 1865. p. 328). It is a box, fixed flat against the wall and open at the top; the front of it, which is, roughly, half a hexagon in shape, is covered with apparently open tracery, or arcading, and masks one half of a double wheel of many bells. Two others he describes at Barcelona: "Near to the door to the sacristies a hexagonal box for the wheel of bells is fixed against the wall; and just below it a fine large square box arcaded at the sides, and painted, appears to contain a couple of larger bells." (Ib. p. 306). He gives a drawing of another, which is in elevation not a hexagon but a complete octagon fastened flat against the wall, and is very open in front, as well as perforated at the sides (Ib. p. 345). Contrast with these the great structure at Milton with the small frame standing loosely within it and contracting the space otherwise available for bells, and nothing in the construction or arcading of it to hint at its being intended for them. Had the ornament been originally constructed for a bell cote, the frame for the bell would surely have been attached directly to it, and without the intervention of another frame; and it would have contained, if not several bells, yet one bell, or wheel, as large as the bottom story would admit of. We might further reasonably expect, instead of the arcading being laboriously carved in solid panels, that every opening would have been cut right through, if not to let the sound out, at least to express the purpose of the chamber. Again we should have expected that the whole ornament would have been arranged so as to be fastened securely against the wall, like the Spanish examples, instead of being clumsily held out from the wall by two irons, which fail to keep it steady. The top stories also, as we have seen, are entirely closed, and bear no evidence of having been used. The bottom of the second story is formed of a board $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. thick, with two other boards, each 1 in. thick, cramped to it by two irons: and there are two other boards, cramped in the same way, at the level of the bottom of the third story. But there is a single board about $3\frac{1}{2}$ in. below this, which has a hole in the middle 2 in. in diameter. May not this board belong to the original structure, and the others be merely strengthening pieces, added when the tabernacle was fixed to the wall by horizontal irons? The pieces cramped together can be so explained, but the board with a hole in the middle can only be explained by a rod or chain having passed through it when the tabernacle, or pix, was hanging.

But besides the definite instances of boxes for sacring bells surviving in Spain, and illustrated in the work which I have quoted above, there is the already mentioned ornament of the fourteenth century still preserved at Tewkesbury on the north wall of the quire at the entrance to the presbytery, which, as seen from beneath, bears every appearance of having been made for a bell, and though its form is different, it essentially resembles the Spanish examples, inasmuch as it is pierced and is fixed flat against the wall. It may be roughly described as being on plan half an octagon, and standing upon a very simple, but solid, stone corbel which is pierced through the middle as if to allow a bell rope to pass. There is no frame for a bell, but a hook in the ceiling, from which a bell may have hung. Nor is there more than one story, and the three principal sides are perforated in their whole height. At Wells there is preserved another lantern-like ornament, but of the thirteenth century and, on plan, a complete circle, which has already been described in The Somerset and Dorset Notes and Queries. This ornament is considered by Mr. W. H. St. John Hope to have been a hanging shrine for the Eucharist, (though described, and it must be admitted, with less probability, as a lantern for a light by Mr. Micklethwaite), and it has indeed been said that the Tewkesbury ornament was once used for the same purpose. Now, if it is granted that the Wells tabernacle was a shrine for the Eucharist, (which in the absence of the definite evidence of a contemporary picture seems less easy to believe than it is to believe the same of the Milton ornament), and if there is any evidence to show that the Tewkesbury ornament was originally a complete octagon, the opinion that it also was a tabernacle for the Eucharist might then be tenable, and this ornament would form a not unnatural link between the Wells and Milton tabernacles. But if, on the other hand, it be granted that the Tewkesbury tabernacle was never anything but a bell cote, its evidence as regards the Milton ornament is even more emphatically against the latter having been made for a bell or chimes, since the two ornaments as they now exist are so essentially different in the method of their construction. There is, however, quite enough surface resemblance between them to make it likely enough that, had there been a similar bell cote to that at Tewkesbury in the same place at Milton, it would have been described by Wharton as "a bit of another model of the same," i.e., the "intended spire." Here, therefore, we have perhaps the most likely conjecture as to what was the other Milton ornament which is now missing.

But, thirdly, the explanation of the existing Milton tabernacle which I have suggested is, on the face of it, a not unlikely one, nor is it without parallel. It is known that ornaments were interfered with for some definite purpose in Queen Mary's and Queen Elizabeth's reigns, as well as out of mere caprice in still later times. There is an instance at Warkleigh of a standing tabernacle being made out of an earlier ornament. The devices on the panels, of which it is constructed, have been cut into, thereby shewing clearly that they were painted before they were put together; and, whatever may have been their previous history, they are of much earlier date than the mouldings on the base which can hardly be before Queen Mary's time. (See the Transactions of the Exeter Diocesan Architectural Society. New Series. Exeter. 1892. Vol. V., pp. 128-130, in which this ornament is figured and described). Again, in Queen Elizabeth's reign, amongst the instances of ornaments turned to other uses than those for which they were intended, the Easter sepulchres were made into "a communion table," "a presse," and "a bear to carie the dead corps and other things." (See Ed. Peacock, English Church Furniture. Lond. 1866. pp. 60, 99, 144. They were besides turned to profane uses, such as "a shelf for to set dishes on," p. 65, "a presse, to laie clothes therein," p. 67, "a henne penne," p. 73). It would, therefore, be nothing improbable, if at that time, or even later, when the hanging tabernacle was no longer used, this ornament at Milton should have been turned into a receptacle for the "small bell inside the church," which Mr. Micklethwaite tells us, seems to have continued in use "even till the stopping of the church services during the puritan usurpation in the seventeenth century" (Transactions of the St. Paul's Ecclesiological Society. Vol. II., p. 317, and Alcuin Club Tracts. I. p. 36). And since, as Mr. Micklethwaite also tells us, other altars besides the high altar were retained at the same time, (Ib. p. 23), the present position of the tabernacle is not difficult to account for, the most important altar at Milton after the high altar (and the altar of the Lady Chapel now destroyed) having probably been in the south transept. What more likely, if there was already in the church a bell cote like that at Tewkesbury, that it should have suggested the use to which the existing tabernacle was turned, after it had ceased to be hung above the high altar?

But, fourthly, there remain two other considerations which bring the probability, if not to a certainty, at least to what in my own mind amounts to a conviction, that we have in the Milton tabernacle one of the shrines in which our forefathers in the English Church reserved the holy Sacrament. One is the evidence of a picture of a similar tabernacle hanging above the high altar of a monastic quire, and the other is the reasonableness and facility of using the tabernacle at Milton in the same way. Here the argument is best helped by the accompanying pictures from the photograph of the miniature kindly lent by Mr. A. W. Luning, and a perspective drawing truly done to scale which shews the existing altar screen at Milton Abbey and the tabernacle hanging in front of it in the manner of the miniature. For the loan of the blocks both of this drawing and of the loose frame within the tabernacle I am indebted to the Rev. E. H. Bousfield.

The original of the miniature may be found in the British Museum (Egerton MSS. No. 1070, fol. 54). It is probably Parisian and of the late fifteenth century, and is said to have been given to King Henry VII. The monks are painted some black and some brown, and may, or may not, be intended to represent a definite order; but it is at the least possible that they were meant for Benedictines, since the lay brothers of the order, (as I am informed by one of the Maredsous congregation) wore brown habits in France. If this be the case the miniature is all the more interesting, but it adds little to the evidence of the picture, since there are other hanging tabernacles shown in late French miniatures in sufficient harmony with English inventories and pictures to give weight to the resemblance which exists between the Milton tabernacle and the tabernacle in this miniature, a resemblance which is so great that it makes it almost impossible to doubt the identity in use of the two ornaments.

It has, however, been objected that the miniature shews only a silver pix of about one foot in height. But, if this be the case, how are some of the other miniatures, to which I have just referred, to be explained? There is, e.g., in the British Museum another French MSS. of the fifteenth century (Add. MSS. No. 16,997, fol. 120), which shews what is obviously a small metal pix hanging from a bracket projecting behind the back of the priest as he stands at the altar, and beneath a white canopy, or pix cloth, of the same form as that in the miniature here printed, but only twice the diameter of the pix. The two tabernacles are as different in size as the two canopies. And it is not merely a difference in the ideas of perspective of the painters of the two MSS., since in the same book, on fol. 145, appears a canopy quite as large as that in the Egerton MS. though without any tabernacle beneath it. No one pretends that the perspective of a miniature is to be entirely trusted, but pictures of this late date evince collectively, and this one in particular, sufficient skill and care to make it unlikely that the painter would have shown a tabernacle the whole height of the window from the reredos to the canopy which hangs close against the roof, if he wished to represent only a metal pix one foot high. Not that the tabernacle is to be measured by the scale of the building which is, as always in these miniatures, obviously contracted, but by the ornaments close to it, such as the altar, which, if taken as 3ft. 6in. high makes the tabernacle not less than 5 or 6 feet, and there was no room to show it higher.

It has also been objected that to hang up so heavy an ornament as the Milton tabernacle over the altar would not be practicable, and that it would look absurdly large and block out the imagery of the altar screen. To this it may be replied that, since the prominence of the tabernacle was a thing that was aimed at, it must be admitted that this example, as shewn in the drawing, does not appear in any degree too large for its surroundings. Nor would its size make it impracticable to hang it; for, large as the tabernacle is, it is smaller in diameter than any contemporary font cover and very considerably lower than many of them. There is, besides, the elaborate account of the pix in the Benedictine Church of Durham at the time of the dissolution, which taken in conjunction with the remains of irons in the screen at Milton, suggests how this tabernacle also may have hung. "Over the High Altar," wrote one of the dispossessed monks of Durham, "did hang a rich and most sumptuous Canapie for the Blessed Sacrament to hang within it, which had two irons fastened in the French Peere" (i.e., the altar screen of French stone), "very finely gilt, which held the canapie over the midst of the said High Altar (that the Pix did hang in it that it could not move nor stir)," when as is mentioned further on, the pix was drawn "upp and downe." (The Rites of Durham, Surtees Society, 15. Lond. 1842. pp. 6, 7.) These two irons, though fixed to the screen, would answer the same purpose as the two irons which remain fixed to the tabernacle of the thirteenth century at Wells, and which are so constructed that the tabernacle could not swing round when drawn up and down. With the summit of the Milton tabernacle, the valuable evidence which it would have supplied has disappeared, but the two irons would probably, as in the contemporary tabernacle of the sister church at Durham, have been in the altar screen, while the weight of the tabernacle would possibly have been relieved by a chain from the roof. What with the wilful destruction and well-intended restorations that the building has passed through, this may be difficult to trace, but there is one iron eye left on the south of the middle of the cornice of the screen which suggests a corresponding one on the north, as well as another eye with the indication of a pulley on the extreme south side (doubtless for the chain which would have let down the tabernacle, but not the canopy), which hint at this arrangement, and certainly it would be a very simple and practical way of hanging the whole shrine. Again, owing to the opening being in the back, it would have been necessary for the tabernacle to have hung far enough west of the screen for the priest to turn to it from the altar to remove the pix, when the tabernacle was lowered. Thus the tabernacle would have been sufficiently in advance of the screen so as not to block out its imagery, while the great altar would have made it impossible for the plain back of the tabernacle ever to be seen. And when the back of an ornament could never under ordinary circumstances be seen, it was not in those days the custom to decorate it. The canopy also, as shown in the printed drawing, would have hidden the steadying irons which came out from the cornice of the screen.

It may be well here further to note that, of all that is shown in this drawing, the altar with its ornaments, the canopy and the images in the screen alone do not exist, and that the size of the altar may be very fairly restored, as in the drawing, from the space at the bottom of the reredos where new masonry has been inserted, and which would make the length almost exactly the same as the original length of the old high altar slab at Tewkesbury. And, though the altar screen has been repaired everywhere in plaster by Wyatt, on the lower part, or reredos, and on the cornice at the top of the screen, as well as on some of the intermediate mullions, it is a surface coating only, while the large tabernacle-work appears to be all in plaster; but unless Wyatt is maligned, the general design of it is too good to be his invention. We are, besides, told (John Hutchins. The History and Antiquities of the County of Dorset. Second Edition. Vol. IV. Lond. 1815, p. 230. And the Third Edition, Westminster, 1872, p. 405) that under Wyatt's direction, about 1789, "the altar-piece, which had been plastered over, as is supposed in the time of Cromwell, to prevent its defacement, was restored."

In conclusion it only remains for me to say that parts of the above notes have already appeared in the Transactions of the St. Paul's Ecclesiological Society (Vol. IV. Part II).

2. CANOPY AT WELLS CATHEDRAL. (V. xxxix. 237, xl. 281.)—I do not think that the extract from the Fabric Rolls dated 1550, quoted in last number, applies to the ornament in question.

It was a time of breaking down of altars and tabernacle work, and sale of ornaments, and I think it refers to tabernacle work with images in stone rather.

If Bp. Finch bought this canopy of the Dean and Chapter, who three years after were parties with the Bishop in selling Bp. Stillington's Chapel to Sir John Gates for the price of the materials, it is not likely that he would have given it back to them.

I send two extracts from an earlier roll, which may have some interest in connection with the subject.

They show that a Canopy of wood for some purpose was part of the ornamental furniture of the church, though at a later time than is supposed to be the date of this ornament.

In Fabric Rolls, 1458, under the head of Custos Canipie, occurs the following entries:—

Et in stipend' Nich. Pelly pro factura carpentarie ejusdem ad taxam 4s. 7d.

Et in una playte de umpyll pro eodem 2s. 10d.

Et in cerico rubeo empt' pro eodem 16d.

4. DORSET RECOVERIES.—The intricate method of conveying a real estate, by means of a judgment obtained in a fictitious law suit, known as a 'Common Recovery,' is said to have originated in a practice used by Religious Houses to acquire land in defiance of the Statute of Mortmain in Edward I's reign, but it did not come into general use till the time of Edward IV. The Calendar of Recoveries in the Record Office begins with the 7th year of Henry VIII, before which date they can only be found by searching the De Banco rolls. In the calendars for the 16th and 17th centuries the counties are mixed, and the extracts which follow are intended, while giving the principal details of each transaction, to reduce the labour of the searcher wishing to obtain the full particulars of any Dorset Recovery (within the period dealt with) in which he may be interested. To show the form used in the calendar, it may be well to copy here in full the first entry relating to Dorset. It runs thus:—"Dors. Wills Frye & al p att' suū pet' u'sus Johēm Frye medietat' uni' toft xx acr tre v acr p'ti & xl acr pastur' cū ptin, in Manston." From this it will be understood that John Frye conveyed to William Frye and others a moiety of an estate comprising one toft, 20 acres of arable, 5 acres of meadow, and 40 acres of pasture, with appurtenances in Manston, and a glance at the first entry below will explain how, to economise space, these extracts have been abridged from the entries in the calendar. The term, year, and number at the beginning of each extract give the full reference to the De Banco roll on which the details of the recovery in question will be found. It may be mentioned, however, that in many cases the additional information afforded by the roll is not much. For example, regarding the first entry referred to before, the roll tells us that the "others" associated with William Frye were Walter Frye and William Gilbert, but there is little more beyond the statement in the calendar. The extraordinary spelling of the names of some of the places mentioned is, it may be supposed, due to the errors of a copyist unacquainted with the county. F.J.P.

In regard to these accounts, it may be noted that the receipts of the Churchwardens consist of rates, gifts to the church, legacie, sale of seats to persons for life for small sums, burials in the church at 6/8 each, an occasional knell, and between 1625 and 1655, contributions from the Communicants.

In the earlier part of the accounts there are payments yearly for "Rogue money," paid to the constables. In 1614 the term is changed for "Hospital money," and so continues in subsequent years to the end of the book, except in 1619, when "Rogue money" again appears. An entry in 1638 "It' to the Constables of the Hundred for the Hospital," shews who were the particular officers to receive the payments.

The Clerk seems to have had no wages, as such, but received a small sum annually for cleaning the churchyard and keeping the bells.

The Churchwardens usually paid 2/- per ann. for rent of the Church House, which is once called the parish house (1609). The sale of the brewing lead and spits in 1623 points to the disuse of this building as a place for parish festivities.

The whipping of dogs out of church appears for the last time in 1641.

The Churchwardens were unfortunate in selling their surplice, 1660, for 12/-, as they had to buy another three years later for £2 12s. 2d.

As lists of ratepayers are valuable as giving the names of proprietors or inhabitants, that for the year 1656 is here transcribed.

8 CLEEVE ABBEY CARTULARY.—Is the Cartulary of Cleeve Abbey in existence, and if so, in whose possession is it? If it still exists it would be worth publishing, as it would probably be of much interest on account of place-names, &c., &c.

9. THE "FATHER" OF AUSTRALIA.—The following letter appeared in the Times of December 3rd, 1897, and is worthy of a place in S. & D. N. & Q.

E. H. BATES.

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—A discovery of some interest has just been made in our parish Church, which I know not how to make known to those most interested, unless it is by means of the publicity your ubiquitous columns alone command. For some time the authorities of New South Wales have been searching for the burial place of Commander Phillip, founder of New South Wales, and, as many hold, the "Father of Australia." Phillip was known to have died in Bath, where he retired to soon after his withdrawal from the service, and a search in the registers of the city of Bath and of the neighbouring villages has resulted in the discovery, first, of the fact that Phillip was buried in this Parish, and, secondly, of his grave, which lies in the floor of Bathampton Church. It bears this inscription :--

Underneath lies the remains of ARTHUR PHILLIP, Esq.,
Admiral of the Blue,
Who died 31st August, 1814,
In his 76th year.

Here, you will observe, is no allusion to his great life work, and, naturally, at that time, though only 23 years before her Majesty came to the throne, his services to the State were not recognized as being worthy of mention ; and it is an impressive comment on the immense growth during these 70 years of the work he inaugurated that although in June last no honour was held to be too great for the colonial statesmen who have entered into his labours, yet on the tomb of the man himself there is absolutely no reference to the fact that he sowed where others are so abundantly reaping. It is not often that tombstones are guilty of a suppressio veri in this sense ; in fact tombstones are so often regarded as a race of barefaced perjurers that it is a comfort to find that they can sometimes lie in a direction other than the usual one.

I have written to various authorities in New South Wales announcing the fact of the grave's existence and expressing the hope that, in some way, the colony will worthily mark the resting-place of this maker of Greater Britain ; but there must be many Australians resident in England, or visiting "home," who will be glad to know where Phillip lies, and, indeed, many of your English readers may like to learn this much more about one who, if history speaks true, is certainly not the least among the builders of Empire.

I am, Sir, yours very faithfully,

LANCELOT J. FISH, Vicar.

Bathampton Vicarage, Bath, Nov. 27, 1897.

10. CARNAFOR.—At Corfe Castle of old the Mayor, with the Ex-Mayor, chose "Coroners for life and Carnafors and Ale-tasters, &c."

Was a 'Carnafor' an inspector of meat? and, as such, the reporter of the sale of flesh of unbaited bulls? and, possibly, the same man, with a double office, as the 'searcher of hides'?

The word cannot be found, or anything like it, in the English-Latin, or 'Latin-barbarous,'—English sections of Littleton's Dictionary.

11. SOMERS FAMILY.—Information is requested as to John Somers, who lived at Regilbury Court, in the parish of Nempnett Thrubwell, Somerset, and died there in 1778. He appears to have been a magistrate for the county. D.K.T.

12. LE SOR & WICKHAM FAMILIES. (V. xxxix. 251)—If Mr. Were will turn to Collectanea Topographica et Genealogica II. 229, he will find that the Elizabeth Wickham referred to was wife of Robert Wickham and daughter of Sir John de Lazore, as it is there spelt. She is there said to have been sole heiress of her father.

14. THE REV. RICHARD GRAVES OF CLAVERTON.—Baptized at Whitchurch, near Reading, January 25, 1748-9, Morgan son of Richard Graves, Clerk, and Lucy his wife. Graves was at this period curate of Aldworth, some six or seven miles from Whitchurch, and it is conceivable that the child was brought to be baptized at the last named parish, because it was the home of Richard Graves' much-attached friend, Anthony Whistler.

15. MUFFLED PEAL ON HOLY INNOCENTS' DAY.—I find it is the custom at Rodney Stoke to ring a muffled peal on Holy Innocents' Day. The custom seems to have existed there from time immemorial and not to be of any recent introduction. Is the custom still kept up in other parishes? I shall be glad to hear of instances of its observance.

T. H. F. HICKES, Draycot Vicarage.

16. S. ERASMUS OR S. ELMO. (I. i. 21, ii. 76, iii. 147, II. xvi. 255, 256.)—A figure of this Saint is to be seen in the South Chapel of Cheddar Church, and another on a panel of the tomb of Sir Thomas Rodney, died 1478-9. In the restoration of the High Altar Screen in S. Albans' Cathedral Church, the name of Saint Erasmus was found on the base which had once supported a figure. The date of the completion of this screen is 1484. Are there instances in Somerset or elsewhere of figures of this Saint, and if so, are any of them of earlier date? Is anything known of the introduction of the cult of this Italian Saint into England?

17. POOLE PARISH REGISTER.—I regret to learn that the old Registers of Poole were so much damaged by the water when they were in London at the time the houses of Parliament were burnt, that the Vicar prudently is most reluctant for them to be examined. All praise is due to him for his great care, but at the same time it is sometimes necessary to obtain evidence from them.

In several Dioceses, either Vicars or persons authorised by them, have made copies of parish registers, and many are published by the Harleian Society. If the Vicar of Poole will either do or allow this before these interesting registers become entirely obliterated by age or the action of the water, he will further obtain the thanks of all who care for records of the past. The sale of copies should both pay expenses and compensate the Vicar for the few casual extracts he now has to make.

Perhaps some local member of the Society will confer with his reverence thereon. C.T.J.M.

18. A NOTE ON RODDEN, NEAR FROME-SELWOOD, being an abstract from the Curia Regis Roll no. 159, m. 43 in the Public Record Office. The case of William de Radene v. William and Joan Braunche & Henry de la Mare, tried on the morrow of S. Martin, in the Michaelmas Term, 42-43 Henry III. illustrates the paucity of the mediæval country population. An item of the evidence is that in A.D. 1255, no one but William de Radene dwelt in the township of Radene (i.e. Rodden), that is, presumably he was the only person having a family residence there. The returns of the collectors of the twentieth on moveables granted by Parliament 23 November, A.D. 1327 gives the names of only three householders contributing to that subsidy (vide Lay Subsidy Roll 169). In the first half of the present century the population of this village was 272 :—

William Braunche and Joan his wife and Henry de la Mare were summoned to answer William de Radene concerning the plea why they took the beasts of William himself and unjustly detained them against the pledge. Whereof the foresaid William says that the foresaid William Braunche, Joan and Henry, on Thursday next after the Feast of the Assumption of B. Mary in the 40th year took and caused to be taken three heifers and an ox of William himself in the township of Raden' and caused them to be driven to the manor of William and Joan of Frome and likewise on the morrow of S. Luke the Evangelist in the same year caused to be taken two of William's mares in the township of Raden' and drove them to the foresaid manor of Frome and there have detained them hitherto against the pledge, to his damage to the value of 40s. And thence he produces suit.

And William, Joan and Henry came by Joan's Attorney.

William and Joan deny the charge and place themselves on the country and William de Radene likewise. Therefore the sheriff was bidden to hold an inquest and make the inquest known by his letters one month after Easter.

And Henry defended the charge, and acknowledged that he took the foresaid beasts and justly, because he says that the Hundred of Frome, in which Hundred is the foresaid township of Raden', was amerced for murder before the justices last itinerant in the county, scilt. at 5 marks, so that by lot made it belonged to the foresaid township of Raden' to give 4s. 11½d. And he says that because the foresaid 4s. 11½d. were in arrears of the foresaid debt of the lord king of 5 marks he Henry himself as sworn servant of the lord king took the foresaid beasts. And that it was thus he places himself upon the country. And William de Raden' says that the Hundred of Frome was not amerced for any murder before the foresaid Justices and that the foresaid Henry never had any precept from the sheriff of Somerset to distrain in the township of Raden' for any debt of the lord king. And concerning this he places himself upon the country. And Henry likewise. Therefore the sheriff is bidden to inquire diligently by 12 men whether the Hundred of Frome was amerced, &c., &c., as Henry says or not, and to make known the inquest a month after Easter by his letters. And on that day the sheriff sent the inquest which says that the foresaid Henry took the beasts of William de Raden' on Thursday next after the Assumption of B. Mary in the 40th year, scilt. 3 heifers and an ox, and on the morrow of S. Luke the Evangelist 2 mares because the Hundred of Frome was amerced at 5 marks before the Justices last itinerant in the county for murder, so that by lot made it belonged to the township of Raden' to give 4s. 11½d. And because William would not pay the money Henry himself took the said beasts through the foresaid William and Joan; and that the township of Raden' was used to pay geld with the Hundred of Frome when it was amerced, but that no one dwells in the foresaid township of Raden' except the foresaid William de Raden'. And therefore it was considered that Henry justly took the said cattle and may have return of the beasts; and that William de Raden' is in mercy for his false claim.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

21. THE GENTLEMAN’S MAGAZINE LIBRARY, ENGLISH TOPOGRAPHY, Part X. (Shropshire—Somersetshire), edited by F. A. Milne, M.A., London, Elliot Stock: 1898, pp. xiv. + 350, 8vo. price 7/6.

This book is very interesting to all Somersetshire men; 145 pages of it refer to that county. Its chief value lies in the fact that it often discourses of buildings, &c., that have now vanished. Thus, to give an instance (p. 230). In 1789 there were buildings near the parish church of Bruton which have long been swept away.

“Over the N. door of a narrow passage which led to the church is a shield carved in stone with arms (probably of the Abbey, a chevron charged with three roses) between the letters W.G."

The arms of the Abbey may be seen on the seals given in S. & D. N. & Q., (III. pp. 217, 233). The arms described above are the arms of Gilbert of Corton Dinham, Somerset, to which family Abbot Gilbert belonged.

This has already been pointed out in the 8th volume of the Somerset Record Society. p. xlv, whence it also appears that the passage to the church still existed in Nightingale's time (1813).

We notice on p. 234 that there is a paragraph respecting Corscombe, this should have been included in the Dorset volume, as the village in question is in that County.

There are two good Indexes.

22. NORTON-SUB-HAMDON, SOMERSET. Notes on the Parish and the Manor and on Ham Hill. By Charles Trask. Taunton: Barnicott & Pearce, 1898. pp. viii. + 252, 8vo., with 9 illustrations and a Map, price 10/-

Messrs. Barnicott & Pearce always turn out their volumes well, and this handsome book is no exception to the rule. The book consists of a preface, 11 chapters, 3 appendices and an index.

At the time of Domesday Book the manor of Norton with the advowson belonged to the Benedictine Abbey of Grestein in Normandy by the gift of Robert, Earl of Mortain. Wilmington Priory in Sussex was a 'cell' to this great Norman Abbey, so we find the Priory presenting to the benefice down to the time of suppression of Alien Priories. It is a pleasant task to welcome these "Parish Histories" as they come out one by one, and we feel that the authors are doing real and good service to the county and are materially helping forward that "New History of Somerset" of which we have heard so much.

23. HISTORY OF BISHOP'S CAUNDLE for Caundle Folk. Sherborne: printed by F. Bennett, the Parade, 1897. Pp. 28. Price 6d.

We are glad to see that the Rector of Bishop's Caundle, Dorset, has issued a booklet of some 28 pages, presenting for the use of his parishioners a sketch of the history of their parish. The history, which is based on a lecture delivered in the preceding winter, is comprised in several sections including Introduction, The Bishop's Manor, The Church and its Rectors, Some Houses in the Village, the Parish Registers and a Conclusion.

It will be understood that this is a handbook for the benefit of the people of the parish, and makes no pretence to be a complete history; the author, however, has produced a very readable treatise within the limits he has set himself. We hope he will keep in view the production of a more extended history at a future day.

SIR JAMES DYER, KNT., LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF COMMON PLEAS.

24. SIR JAMES DYER, KNT., LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF COMMON PLEAS.—The illustration given herewith presents the “Vera effigies Jacobi Dyer, Militis,” from a portrait of the Somerset Worthy in the possession of Rev. Canon Mayo.

Sir James was born at Roundhill, Wincanton, son of Richard Dyer, about the year 1512, and after sojourning at Broadgates Hall, Oxford, entered the Middle Temple and was called to the Bar probably in 1537. In 1552 he became Serjeant-at-Law, and the same year Autumnal Reader to the Middle Temple, and King's Serjeant. On January 26, 1552-3, he was elected Knight of the Shire for Co. Cambridge, and Speaker of the House of Commons on March 2nd following. On the accession of Mary he was made Queen's Serjeant, Recorder of Cambridge in 1554, and a Puisne Judge of Common Pleas in 1557, and of the Queen's Bench the next year. His Commission in the Common Pleas was renewed by Elizabeth the day after her accession, and he became Chief Justice of the Court, Jan'y 22nd, 1559-60. He died 25th March, 1582 (some accounts say 24th March) and was buried at Great Stoughton, co. Hunts, where dame Margaret, his wife, daughter of Sir Maurice a Barrow, and widow of Sir Thomas Ellyot, Knt., of Carlton, co. Cambridge, had already preceded him to the grave. His ‘Reports’ were published after his death by his nephews, James Dyer and Richard Farewell. His will, dated 13th March, 1581, and proved 28th June, 1582, is in 28, Tirwhite, P.C.C.

The portrait, from which the present illustration is derived, is a fine and striking oil-painting, measuring 39 ins. by 49 ins., and was formerly in the collection of Mr. Acraman, of Clifton, dispersed in 1842. It subsequently came into the hands of Mr. Stephen Jarrett, of Salisbury, and in 185 was purchased by the Rev. William Mayo. The earlier history of the picture is not known to the writer. It differs in certain details from the portrait, formerly in the Town Hall of Wincanton, and destroyed by fire on 9th August, 1877, but is a better painting.

A portrait at Bromham Hall, co. Bedford, is there reputed to be a likeness of Sir James, but it is evidently the representation of another person, as it bears no resemblance to either of the portraits already mentioned, or to the engraving by Drapentier, annexed to the ‘Reports.’

C.H.M.

25. CRAUCOMBE—CAREW.—The papers here presented to the reader are taken from a collection of documents relating to the ancient family of Craucombe or De Craucombe and their possessions in the county of Somerset. At the commencement of the last century they were furnished by Thomas Carew, then owner of Craucombe or Crowcombe, to the Rev. George Harbin (a gentleman who made many valuable contributions to the history of Somersetshire families) and ultimately they came into the hands of his name-sake the late George Harbin of Newton Surmavile.

Mr. Carew's account does not extend farther back than the reign of Edw. II. But one of the early charters in the collection is a grant from Hugh de Ralegh to Simon de Craucombe of lands in the Manor of Craucombe, and we know that this Hugh flourished in the reign of Hen. II.

Contemporary with him was Wimond de Craucombe who 12 Hen. II. held with Reginald Heirun one Knight's fee in Somerset of Henry Luvel.

Collinson (Hist. Som. III. 514) says Robert de Constabulo who held Crowcombe under the Earl of Morton (Dom. Book), was the grandfather of Simon Fitz-Robert who 5 Steph. had married the daughter of Wimond de Craucombe—but leaving no issue—Crowcombe was divided between her two brothers Ralph and Godfrey in moieties—that Godfrey gave his moiety to the Nunnery of Stodley in Oxfordshire—and that Ralph's moiety came to Simon de Craucombe who is the first possessor mentioned by Mr. Carew.

That learned antiquary, the late Mr. Eyton, expresses a strong opinion (Som. Dom. p. 202) of the inaccuracy of Collinson's account. According to him Robert Constable or Fitz-Ivo (whom Collinson styles "Robert de Constabulo") was the direct ancestor of the Beauchamps of Hatch who were Lords Paramount of Crowcombe, and he implies that they had no further connection with the De Craucombe family than the seigniority of the Manor.

27. HUGH FITZ GRIP. (IV. xxvi. 35).—Attention was called at the above-named reference to the wife of Hugh Fitz Grip as being Haduidis (Hawise), daughter of Nicholas de Baschelvilla. A notice on the same subject has also been contributed to the London Notes and Queries (9th S. I. Mar. 19, '98, page 221) by Mr. A. S. Ellis.

After mentioning that the Waldun in the grant by this lady to the Abbey of Montivillier, is identified by Eyton as Broad Waddon, and by Hutchins as Frier Waddon, in the parish of Portisham, Dorset. and referring to Galfrid Martel, brother of the aforesaid Hugh, and Robert de Novilla, probably her first cousin, as two of the witnesses, he adds—

“Some interesting genealogical facts are revealed by this. Robert Malet, founding Eye Priory, in Suffolk, gave to it with his consent all the land Walter fitz Grip held in Frasingfield, with the mill there, (‘Mon. Angl.,’ i. 356). Walter, it will appear, was Hugh’s brother, for a charter by which William Martel, King Stephen’s dapifer, gave to Eye Priory all the land which Osbut de Conteville held in Acolt is witnessed by Walter fitz Grip, avunculus suus (Reg. f. 23). It was this William, son of Galfrid Martel, who confirmed his father’s gift of Little Blenford (co. Dorset) to Clerkenwell Priory (‘Mon. Angl.,’ i. 431) when Albreda, his mother, was made a nun. Galfrid Martel gave to Bermondsey Priory in 1093, with the leave of Galfrid de Magna villa, the land of Halyngbury and the tithes of Alferton (ib. 640). William Martel, with Albreda his wife and Gaufrid, gave his manor of Snape and Aldebure to Colchester Abbey (ib. ii. 894). Galfrid was a feudal tenant of Galfrid de Magna villa, 1086, and his name is once given in full in Domesday Book (ii. 57 b.) in reference to his holding in one of the Rodings in Essex.

The Martels and the Malets were neighbours in Suffolk and in Normandy before they came over, having been, according to an old saying, the two most noble families in the Pays de Caux.

The widow of Hugh fitz Grip is said, with great probability, to have been married by Alured de Lincoln, to whose heirs the Dorset fief certainly descended. This suggests that the shrievalty of Dorset and custody of Wareham Castle were heritable as well, and possibly so derived from Nicholas de Basqueville; but there is no evidence to show that he preceded Hugh or was ever in England.

About 1087, a year after Domesday, we find Alured (described as “Alfridus de Guarham,” i.e., Wareham) witnessing a Lincolnshire charter of Ivo de Talebois to Spalding Abbey (‘Mon. Angl.,’ i. 308.)”

“Galfrid Martel might have been brother-in-law only of Hugh, but this is not likely.”

30. TOMBSTONE OF THOMAS FRY.—When visiting Shillingstone in 1887 I was shewn some pieces of a tombstone to a Thomas Fry. On a subsequent visit the stone had disappeared and presumably is destroyed; it may, therefore, not be out of place to record the inscription in the pages of S. & D. IV. & Q.

“In Memory of | Thomas Fry | of Childeokeford | who died December 21, 1796 | Aged 61 years.”

This Thomas Fry is said to have been the largest farmer of his time, in Dorset, and to have held Beermarsh, Hanford and Childe Okeford farms.

He was son of Thomas and Ann Fry, was baptised at Shillingstone, Aug. 8th, 1736, was married at Childe Okeford to Fanny Candy on June 13th, 1790, and was buried at Shillingstone, Decr. 22nd, 1796. His will, dated 28th April, 1792, was proved 6th Sept., 1797, in the Archdeacon's Court, Blandford. His widow was married at Childe Okeford, 24th Sept., 1797, to James Scard of Shroton.

32. "SOMERSET INCUMBENTS." F. W. Weaver, 1889. — Allerton.

On page 6 of the above named book, the entries of incumbents (John de Cameville excepted) as far as to John Sparke in the year 1482, do not belong to Allerton, but to the Free Chapel of Alston Sutton in the parish of Weare. The mistake has arisen from Archdeacon Archer (supposing him to have been the copyist) having read the word "Alueston" as Aluerton.

The institution of Nicholas Sturgeon in 1414 is "ad liberam Capellam de Alueston al's Aluodeston" (see Bubwith's Register, Fo. 87). That of John Lokhaw is headed "Ecclesie de Wroxhale. Permutacio cum capella de Alueston et ecclesie de Avening." (Id. Fo. 126). He is admitted "ad liberam Capellam de Alueston" "ad quam per probum virum Thomam Pomeray militem verum dicte Capelle hanc vice patronum exstitit presentatus." But Sir Thomas Pomeray had no concern with Allerton, but, as may be seen in the 'Inquisitio post mortem,' 12 Richard 2, was lord of the Manor of Alston Sutton. In 1433 Bishop Stafford admitted John Cole, clĭcum, "ad liberam Capellam de Aluodeston," and in 1441, "Ricardum Denys, presb^{um}, ad liberam capellam de Alueston.' In 1482, when Roger Denham presented John Sparke, Bishop Stillington by his vicar general ordered an enquiry to be made as to the patronage "Capelle libere de Alueston al's Alueston" belonging of right to Roger Denham. The enquiry was conducted in the parish church of St. Cuthbert in Wells by twelve examiners of the evidence produced, of whom six were rectors or vicars, and six laymen "honestos et fide dignos dicte capelle viciniore, que Capella situ dicta existit infra paroĉh ecclie de

Were." A second enquiry was made in the parish church of Weare, the result of which was that the examiners affirmed, 'inter alia,' that the chapel was a "Capella libera non habens curam animarum," but that the cure of souls belonged to the vicar of the parish church of Weare. In accordance with this decision, the vicar general instituted John Sparke "clericum ad liberam capellam de Alueston al's Alwiston infra parochiam eccl'ie parochialis de Were." All this may be seen in Bishop Stillington's Register, Fo. 110. As to the institutions to Allerton both previous to, and during this time, from the 13th century till towards the end of the 15th, there were apparently none, as it was a "Capella" dependent on Wedmore. The reference to John de Cameville in 1338 concerns another matter, and one of no little interest, but has nothing to do with institution (see Register of Bishop Ralph, pp. 319, 320, Somerset Record Society). The valuation of the Chapel at Alston Sutton in 1548 is given in "Somerset Chantries," S. R. S., page 78.

33. ARMORIALS OF BABER IN CHEW MAGNA CHURCH.—I cannot find that these have been recorded, except partially in Collinson; if they have, I must apologise. In pediment: crest. On esquire's helmet on wreath argent and gules (Burke says also "on mount vert") a cock with wings expanded or (Burke says "argent") comb and wattles of the 2nd and on scroll "unicuique sui"; on shield "Argent on a fess gules three hawks' heads erased of the 1st" Baber. In middle of monument at the back three shields; (1). Baber as before. (2). Baber impaling "Gules a cross engrailed and in 1st quarter a lozenge (Collinson does not give this) really argent" but daubed with bolus. Leigh of Warwickshire. (3). "Vert fretty or." Whitmore. In middle of base, what reads as "Barry of six or and azure" really "Azure two bars argent, on a canton sable" an animal's head, really "a wolf's head erased of the 2nd" Wilbraham (Mary Baber married first a Wilbraham,) impaling Baber. West sides of base two shields. (1). Quarterly 1st and 4th. Whitmore as before. 2nd and 3rd daubed with bolus, really "Argent on a chevron sable three bezants" Bond. This is apparently to show the ancestry of Ann, wife of Francis Baber; then, why quarterly? Only I think on the supposition that it is wrongly blazoned, and that the 1st quarter should be the London Whitmores, viz. "Vert, fretty or, on a canton of the 2nd a cinquefoil, pierced azure," whilst the 4th remains the old coat. (2). daubed with bolus really "Argent a chevron (blazoned chequy as the lines are square the projections or) chequy gules and or between three billets sable, on chevron point a dexter hand of the 2nd" Delves (Mary Baber married secondly Sir Thomas Delves) impaling Baber. I am indebted to Mr. Wood of Chew for the pedigrees. On corbels in roof are duplicates of the above.

34. MEDIÆVAL CHURCH BELLS IN DORSET.—Many years ago, from 1850 onwards, I made notes of Mediæval Bells in Dorset Church Towers, some of which, if still in existence, I should like to examine again, and take “squeezes” or impressions from the inscriptions and foundry-marks. Unhappily, on revisiting some of those churches lately, I have found, too often, that the old bells had disappeared—recast or even sold. The churches named in the subjoined list are some of those to which I refer, and I should be grateful for information as to any of them—whether the Mediæval Bells are still in the towers or whether they have disappeared.

35. DAUBENEY TOMB AT JERUSALEM. (V. xxxviii. 208.)—While thanking Mr. Hamlet for his interesting communication, and looking forward with much pleasure to his promised further contribution, may I add for the information of those who may be interested in the subject, that Philip Daubeney was not the only member of the family who took an active part in those troublous times, but that one William de Aubenie, a kinsman of Philip's, was one of the 25 Barons elected at the time of the Great Charter as conservators of the public liberties, and that a William de Albiney (probably the same person as Wm. de Aubenie) with 140 Knights and their retainers took possession of and fortified Rochester Castle against the King, but the Royal forces eventually starved out the garrison, the Castle was surrendered to the King, several of the garrison were killed, and William de Albiney, the chief of the confederated Barons, was imprisoned. Robert de Todenī who came over with the Conqueror, and had 81 Manors and Lordships granted to him by the King, was the ancestor of this Wm. de Albiney, was lord of Belvoir, Leicestershire, and the founder of the Priory there. W.D., Bath.

36. GAOL FEVER AT ILCHESTER GAOL, IN 1730.—Hutchins, in his History of Dorset, Vol. I., Page 79, under Blandford, says,—“Sir Thomas Pengelley, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, died here on his return from the Western Circuit of the gaol distemper brought from Ilchester to Taunton by the prisoners, on April 14, 1730. Sir James Shepherd, Knt., member for Honiton, Thomas Morley, Esq., Serjeant-at-law, John Pigott, Esq., Sheriff of Somersetshire, &c., died of the same distemper, a few days before.”

Sir James Shepherd, Knt., Serjeant-at-law, had a residence at Honiton, destroyed by fire in 1747, situate nearly opposite the former Allhallows Chapel, now occupied by St. Paul's Church. He was member for Honiton in 1710, 1713, and 1714, and was buried at the east end of the south chancel aisle of St. Michael's Church, where there is a very fine marble monument to his memory (the material is said to have been brought from the entrance hall of his dwelling house) and on it this inscription:—

H. J.

Jacobus Shepherd de Lawell, Eques auratus, et serviens ad legem D'm'i Regis Georgii,
In expectationem diei supremi.

Qualis erat,

Dies iste indicabit.

ob:

Aetat 49,

1730.

He is also said to have given from his garden at Honiton the eight yew trees on each side of the church-yard walk leading to the vestry.

This “fever” appears to have been as destructive, as that which happened at the “Black Assizes” held at Exeter in 1586, when the Judge, Sir J. Chichester, Sir A. Bassett, Sir B. Drake, eleven of the jury and numerous others, sickened and perished of the deadly infection, from “the noisome smell that arose from the bar.”

Probably virulent typhus, described of old as “putrid” or “spotted,” engendered among the poor wretches, huddled together in the filthiest surroundings, rotting alive, and half-starved also on the unwholesome food doled out to them by some infamous contractor who “farmed” the miserable supply they received; and to complete their misery in the middle of the last century, at Exeter, when this frightful disease was found to be raging in the gaol, the attendant surgeon, was by contract, specially exempted from attending them! Good old times! R.

37. NOTES ON HUYSHE IN Som. Archæol. Proceedings. 1897. Vol. xliii.—The last note on page 10 says, “The visitations take no account of the marriages of John Vernai with three wives”; but Collinson, I. 254, says, and therefore I suppose Mr. Palmer, that they were Isabel, d. of Sir J. Touchet Lord Audley; Eleanor, d. of John Brent, and Margaret, d. of Richard Arthur. The tomb of William Vernai, son of Eleanor, in Stoke Courcy Church, has on it the following coats:—Vernai impaling a wyvern Brent; three arrows (really lances), the broad arrows of Arthur, and three bucks’ heads without a chevron, Broughton his wife. Now this proves two of the marriages, and it looks as if he, the head of the house, ignored his father’s first marriage, there being no issue. From the third wife, Margaret Arthur, came his step-brother, Alexander, who married Anne Huyshe.

Again on page 11. “X.—Oliver Hewish of Doniford, married a Cavendish.” If this rests on wills and deeds, well and good, but it looks as if it did on the coat of arms, the note at any rate gives that impression. Now the Broughton coat on William Vernai’s tomb may be read as a Cavendish, viz., “Sable three bucks’ heads 2 and 1 argent,” there being no chevron; so it looks as if the Broughtons originally bore it so; no doubt a later visitation proved the right of the Cavendish to it, and therefore the Broughton was differenced by a chevron; thus it is possible that Oliver married a Broughton, which possibly brought about the Broughton and Huyshe alliance, as they appear in the Sand windows, side by side.

39. NOTES ON THE FAMILY OF POLE OF SHUTE, DEVON, AND THEIR CONNECTION WITH TAUNTON IN ENGLAND, AND THE UNITED STATES, &c.—In Toulmin and Savage's History of Taunton, 1822, page 197, we find in relation to the Grammar School there that "On 12 June, 1555, the said President (of Corpus Christi, Oxon.) and Warden (of New College, Oxon.) and Edward Friar and Henry Bailey, executors and residuary legatees of the testator (William Walbee a benefactor to the school) contracted with William Pole, Esq., of Colyford (a village in the parish of Colyton) for the purchase of divers lands in the parish of Hawkchurch, Dorset, for the sum of 400 marks, and the said William Pole in consideration of the said sum, granted sold and conveyed to Sir Wm. Portman (and others) all those his messuages, cottages, lands, tenements, &c., called Coffinshayes and Castle in Hawkchurch (with certain exceptions) to hold to the said Sir Wm. Portman, &c., to the use, and for and towards the finding a Schoolmaster for ever within the Free Grammar School, then newly built and edified in the town of Taunton."

This purchase throws a little light on the somewhat obscure history of the said William Pole (father of the Antiquary, and grandfather of Elizabeth and William Pole, the founders of Taunton, U.S.) hitherto not cleared up. In the Colyton Register we find there was buried 1 August, 1547, Mr. Wm. Beaumont of Colyford, (probably a scion of the Beaumonts of Gittisham, near Honiton) who resided perhaps at Stowford, an old sixteenth century house, still standing in Colyford, the lands around being a portion of the dismembered manor of Gatcombe. In the same Register, we find among the Marriages in 1548,—the year after Mr Beamonte's death,—that “Willyam Poole, of the Inner Temple, London, gentleman, the sone of Mr. - - - Poole, of - - - was wedded unto Mrs. Tamsyn Beamonte, widdowe, late wyef of John Strobrydge of Streethayne, and daughter of John Tudboll of Lyme Reg: the xxvi daye of November.” This brings the vendor of the lands at Hawkchurch to the Taunton Grammar School trustees, and the twice widowed lady of Colyford together. The Tudbolls or Tudbolds, were a reputable family—probably merchants—of Lyme Regis, a Mr. William Tudbold being Mayor of the Borough in 1551. The Strowbridges were also of gentle descent, and merchants, held and resided both at Streethayne and Howberhayne, considerable estates in Colyton, where large portions of their antient dwellings still remain. A John Strowbrydge is commemorated on a brass plate in the church, who died in 1516. Presumably he may have been the father of Mrs. Tamsyn Beamont's second husband, and who also might be one of the persons recorded in the Princess-Countess of Devon's Book of Household Expenses (she was Katherine, daughter of Edward iv.), when in 1524 she was on a visit to Colcombe, in Colyton, and expecting her ill-fated son, the Marquis of Exeter, as having “Presented to my Lady's grace by two Strobryges at Colcum, four sugar loovys, one to my lady's grace to hyr chambre.” A John Strowbrydge was one of the Members for Lyme Regis—2 & 3 Philip and Mary—1555-6; probably her son, and to whom relates a marriage recorded in the Register in 1558, “John Strowbridge of Streethayne, was wedded to Mrs. Dorothy Carwithen, widdowe, daughter of Syr John Gaynford of Cowhurst, in the co. of Surry, Knt.;” whose first husband was Thomas Carwithen of Exeter, whose descendants were merchants, and settled in that City.

Thus from the circumstances of her birth, and the social position of her two first husbands, she was probably a well-dowered widow.

But who was the third bridegroom she had captured, or rather had captured her, and where did he come from? It was evident the recording scribe in the Register did not know, although he must have been resident in the neighbourhood, but he was aware of the facts that “Mr. Willyam Poole” was a gentleman, and learned in the law, sufficient credentials for the introduction of a person, destined afterwards to hold a most influential position in those parts.

Mrs. Tamsyn Beamont must have been Mr. William Pole's first wife and his superior in age, by whom he had no issue. She is not alluded to in the inscription put on his tomb in Colyton Church by his son the Antiquary, where he is described as having married Katherine, the daughter of Alexander Popham of Huntworth, leaving two children, the Antiquary, and his sister married to Thomas Erle of Charborough. Dying in 1587, aged 72, would make his age at his marriage with the widow Beamonte in 1548 to be 33. His son the Antiquary, doubtless by Katherine Popham, was "chrystened" at Colyton, 27 August, 1561, and buried there 10 March, 1635.

But the coming of this gentleman, his son the accomplished genealogist fully describes in the pedigree set forth in the inscription, that his father was William Pole, and his mother Agnes Drake of the knightly family of Ash, and his grandmother (the wife also of a William Pole) was Edith, the daughter of Richard Tytherleigh of Tytherleigh, a manor in the parish of Chardstock, an adjoining parish to Hawkchurch, the remains of whose seat there, evidenced by a lofty elliptic arch, surmounted by their arms, and flanked by walls of splendid ashlar work,—a picturesque object abutting on the main road, half-way between Axminster and Chard,—still betokens that she came of a country squire's race of that era, but now extinct; and it may not be at all improbable that the Hawkchurch lands came through this alliance.

Subsequently this unknown gentleman, described by his son as Treasurer and Double-Reader of the Inner Temple, purchased of Sir William Petre, principal Secretary to Queen Mary, that portion of the forfeited estate of the Duke of Suffolk at Shute, which he held as the descendant of the great heiress Cicely Bonville, where Mr. Pole settled, and rebuilt the mansion. He also acquired a portion of the forfeited estate of the unfortunate Henry Courtenay, Marquis of Exeter, at Colcombe, an adjoining manor, where he placed his son the Antiquary, who afterwards purchased the other moieties.

And it must have been from Colcombe that two of his children, William and Elizabeth Pole, left their comfortable home and under the irresistible influence of religious conviction, emigrated to the unknown wilds and dangers of New England, there founding another Taunton and a new Dorchester,—a history well known and need not here be further enlarged on, beyond remembering the connection, that they were the grandchildren of the William Pole who sold his lands at Hawkchurch to the Trustees of the Taunton Grammar School,—who, it may be, still hold them,—and also that the interesting coincidence appears to have been an hitherto unnoticed circumstance.

41. MONUMENT TO THE WIFE OF JOHN STILL, BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS.—In the Topographer and Genealogist, vol. ii., page 155, there is described as being in Hadleigh Church, Suffolk, a monument with the figure of a woman, one foot eleven inches high, under an arch round which is this inscription:—

“Anna Still uxor Joh'is Ep'i Bathonie ob: 15 April 1593.”

This must be for the wife of John Still, D.D., consecrated Bishop of Bath and Wells, 11 Feb., 1592-3, died 16 Feb., 1607-8; buried at Wells, and whose tomb and effigy are in the north transept.

42. DORSET LAY SUBSIDY ROLLS.—The following is an attempt to put within a moderate compass what is, in its original form, a somewhat voluminous document.

The Calendars of the Lay Subsidies for Dorset are contained in 4 out of 70 vols. that comprise the series for the whole Kingdom at the Public Record Office, London, and are made up of descriptive slips of every document now remaining there. A good many of the documents are merely accounts or totals of moneys received, but those calendared here are such as are marked with a large letter N in red ink, which is understood to mean Nominum and are those documents which contain the names of persons assessed for taxes in the respective Hundreds, Tithings, Boroughs, Manors, and Liberties within the County.

The number that has a fractional appearance is that by which it is known at the Public Record Office, then follows the date, then a number indicating the Hundred &c. assessed, (for which see Index following) and lastly the condition and number of membranes.

It is pretty evident that only a portion of the documents originally returned into the Court of the Exchequer now remains to us, for many are fragments, while in other cases only a membrane or two remain; but when it is considered what vicissitudes our Public Records have been subjected to in the places where they in times past have been stored, what dangers of fire, water, damp and vermin they have run (all of which may be read of in the Parliamentary reports issued at various times) it is wonderful that so many remain to us now. Much care and labour have of late years been bestowed in flattening and mending the documents and our best thanks are due to the Authorities for the careful way in which they have been restored and rendered available for consultation, and for the ease with which any required document can now be obtained.

The greater part of the Dorset Lay subsidies are in good condition, some are in excellent preservation, but there is one document which is generally considered as giving a kind of standard of the respectability and standing of the families living in the Kingdom in 1672, namely, the Hearth Tax returns 131 $\frac{105}{342}$ 24 Charles II. which (in the case of Dorset) is a most disappointing document. It is the most bulky of the whole class and contains 76 membranes, but fate has so ordained that nearly the whole of the left hand side of these membranes has, either by fire or damp, been consumed away, leaving only the portions of names of places remaining and in most instances none of the names of the persons. The number of hearths in each household is throughout left intact but that information becomes of no use or interest when the persons to whom they belonged is lost for ever.

In conclusion it must not be supposed that the compiler has taken out the names of the hundreds, &c., assessed from the documents themselves, but there is sufficient information to guide any one to the document required, and should an exhaustive search be necessary the enquirer is recommended to look at every one of the documents mentioned at the period required.

I have been unable to identify 65. Walham and 67. Pokelynton liberty. E. A. FRY.

43. ELTON FAMILY. (IV. xxvii. 84, xxviii. 147, xxix. 181.)—At the second of the above references George Elton was mentioned as admitted to the freedom of the City of Bristol in 1639. This proves to be an error, as the name, on this occasion, is really Eston. At the third reference, Mrs. Abigail Baylie was Abigail, daughter of Edmund Baylie, Esq., of Frome Selwood.

47. LE SOR AND WICKHAM FAMILIES (V. xxxix. 251.)—Elizabeth Wickham was the daughter of Sir John Le Sor, and married, 1291, Sir Robert Wykham, Knt., of the Swalcliffe family. He died in 1327. She was living 1333. The arms of Le Sor, variously spelt as Lizurs, Lisures, Lesore, Lysures, &c., are Or a chief azure.

The arms impaling Wickham, at the west end of the Rodney Tomb, erected circa 1536, appear to be 3 lampreys or eels.

48. BISHOP ALHSTAN'S RING.—J. H. Hanshall writes from Chester to the Gentleman's Magazine, of Dec., 1823, describing the ring of Alhstan, Bishop of Sherborne, then in his possession. An engraving of it is also given.

"It was found about 50 years ago, by a labourer, near to the surface of the ground, in a common at Llys faen [Carnarvonshire]. It is of massy gold, weighing nearly an ounce and a quarter. The workmanship is very neat, and the enamelling distinct and perfect. The pattern is alternately a circle and a lozenge; the outer part wrought in an ornamental style. The circular compartments, four in number, bear the epigraph. On the first (in Saxon characters) A; on the second LH; on the third ST; on the fourth

A; and the Runic N, like X, forming the word Alhstan. The lozenges are occupied with different devices; on the first is a rude representation of a dragon, the cognizance of the Kingdom of Wessex, and under which Alhstan, Bishop of Sherborne, often led its armies to battle. There were three Bishops of London of this name, and one (the seventh) of Sherborne; but the ring is supposed to have been the property of the latter, (who filled the episcopal chair from 817 to 867) being well known as an efficient member of the true Church Militant. . . . This ring attracted the particular notice of Dr. Pegge, in 1771; and in 1773 he read a paper respecting its history before the Society of Antiquaries, on the 2nd of December; which is printed in Archæologia, IV, 47." NOTICES OF BOOKS.

49. ON THE SO-CALLED DIVINING ROD, OR VIRGULA DIVINA. By W. F. Barrett, Professor of Experimental Physics in the Royal College of Science for Ireland. London, Kegan, Paul, &c., 1897. (Reprinted from Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, Part xxxii.) Demy 8vo. Pp. 282.

Professor Barrett's valuable monograph upon the Divining Rod should have been noticed earlier in our pages. He has produced the most complete and scientific account of the Rod which has yet appeared, and it will be read with especial interest by dwellers in the West of England, with which part of the country so many experts with the 'Virgula' are or have been connected. Professor Barrett has collected a mass of particulars, which he has carefully sorted and arranged, and to which it would be impossible to refer at length on this occasion. We venture, however, to give a summary of the conclusions at which he has arrived. (p. 254.)

"Assuming the actual motion of the Rod to be caused by involuntary muscular action, a summary of the causes determining that motion, excluding of course cases of fraud or self-delusion, may, in my opinion, be given as follows:—

1. In every case the direction of the motion of the Rod, upwards or downwards, and probably in all cases the motion itself, will be found to arise from a suggested or preconceived, but usually latent, idea in the dowser's own mind. It is the unconscious emergence of a fixed or derived idea registered in, or made upon, the unconscious self.

2. In some cases . . . an idea is unconsciously conveyed to the dowser's mind by almost imperceptible signs, unintentionally made by those present; or by (3).

3. In many cases, an impression from without, derived through the ordinary channels of sensation, appears to be unconsciously made upon the dowser by faint indications associated in the dowser's mind with the particular object of his search . . . Added to this we have the ordinary observing power of the dowser, trained by years of continuous practice at one particular occupation, and constantly confirmed or corrected by the results of his previous trials.

4. In other cases, however, an impression from without appears to be gained, not through the ordinary channels of sensation. Thought-transference will, I believe, be found to receive remarkable confirmation from experiments with the dowsing rod . . .

5. There appears to be evidence that a more profound stratum of our personality, glimpses of which we get elsewhere in our Proceedings, is associated with dowser's art; and the latter seems to afford a further striking instance of information obtained through automatic means being often more reliable than, and beyond the reach of, that derived from conscious observation and inference. The whole of the evidence cited, in my opinion, cannot be explained away, merely by the practical knowledge of the dowser, nor by the explanations given in 1, 2, 3 and 4."

For the examples of the use of the Rod, on which these conclusions are based, we beg to refer our readers to Professor Barrett's interesting work. Δ.

50. PARISH REGISTER AND BRITISH RECORD SOCIETIES.—We have received the annual Reports of these Societies for the year 1897. Both are able to announce satisfactory progress. The former has printed during the year Registers of Stratford-on-Avon, St. Nich, Ipswich, Upton, Berks, Haydon, co. Linc., Newendon, Kent, and Kirk Ella, Yorks. The latter has continued to advance with the Calendars of P.C.C. Wills, and of the Wills of Sussex, Dorset and co. Leicester,—with the Faculty Office Marriage Licences,—and with abstracts of Inq. p.m. of London, Wilts and co. Glouc.;—and two volumes of calendars of Edinburgh Testaments and Bristol Wills, have been completed. This is good fruit to show for a year's work. Only one thing is needed to produce even more rapid progress, viz., additional subscribers of £1 1s. od. to each Society, of both of which Mr. E. A. Fry, 172 Edmund St., Birmingham, is Hon. Secretary. Δ.

51. PICKERING AND CHATTO'S BOOK CATALOGUES.—We have received Part V, and the previous Numbers, of Messrs. Pickering and Chatto's Illustrated Catalogue of Old and Rare Books. These lists are the result of "an attempt to make an ordinary Catalogue of Books for Sale a little more attractive in appearance and text than is usually the case." In this effort the Firm has succeeded admirably, and it is a pleasure to turn over their well-printed pages, illustrated with reproductions of many curious engravings. These Catalogues may be obtained at 1/- each, on application at 66 Haymarket, London, S.W. Δ.

52. NOTES ON CHURCHES IN BRUTON DEANERY. (V. xxxv. 89, xxxvi. 126, xxxvii. 183).—

MILTON CLEVEDON, S. James [Som. A. & N. H. S. Proc. xxiv. i. 42]. Collinson (i. 223) wrote of this building that it was 'a small structure consisting of a nave, chancel, and small south aisle, with a low clumsy tower at the west end, apparently older than the rest of the building, having over its western entrance an ancient zigzag arch. In a recess in the north wall of the chancel lies the effigy in stone of a lady, but no inscription is visible.' He does not mention the porch on the south side, which was certainly in existence at that time. While his account was passing through the press, the Norman tower was being destroyed to make way for a plain structure, which has somewhat of an historic interest, in that it was 'built with 1192 feet of stone from Bruton Abbey,' the quondam owner of the rectory and advowson. Some years ago a small transept was added on the north side. In the north wall of the nave is a doorway, now blocked up. The south aisle has a steep gable with block parapet. It also had an outer doorway and a piscina, but these are now hidden under the universal coating of plaster which probably conceals the Norman details alluded to by Phelps. The window in the east wall is earlier than the aisle, or rather chapel, and may have been reinserted there after the wall of the nave was pierced through by the present four-centered arch. The other original windows in the church are probably perpendicular, but owing to the labours of the late incumbent, it is not easy to be positive about anything in the building. In the north transept are some fragments of glass in yellow and brown stain. They are the Sacred Monogram on a yellow shield, a demi-angel, the five wounds, and a Lombardic M. The recumbent figure in the chancel is that of a priest in a chasuble holding a chalice between his hands. This is of the shape of the chalices of the 13th cent., and the style of the drapery agrees with this date. At Ditchet is another ecclesiastical effigy. All the fittings of the church are new, placed there by the Rev. S. G. Selwyn during his residence. What appears to be the bowl of the old font is now in the vicarage garden.

On the outside of the east wall of the south chapel is this monument:

'Under that stone's a child wrapt in earth's mold,
for whom cannot his parents grieve be told.
In wit most rare, noe lesse in grace was he;
the sooner fit with Christ in bliss to be.

'John Thacher borne iv. 12. 1615.'

John, son of Peter Thacher, V. of M. C. was buried 13 June, 1622, Par. Reg.

Part of an incised slab is now built into the churchyard wall to serve as a stile.

For the greater part of these notes I am indebted to the Rev. F. W. Weaver, whose appointment to the Vicarage of Milton Clevedon will be welcomed by every subscriber to S. & D. N. & Q.

PENSELWOOD (S. Michael). A small and much renovated building, set on a hill. It consists of nave, tower at west end, porch on south side, chancel, and north aisle added in 1849. The nave was rebuilt in 1805 (Phelps) and the chancel has been renovated. The oldest part of the church is the Norman doorway and the font (see illustrations in Phelps). The doorway has a flat lintel, over which is a semi-circle of zigzag moulding surrounded by a bold roll; the ends of the roll rest on abaci supported by shafts set back in nooks, on the outer jambs of which is cut a dancettée moulding. The tympanum is left blank; on the lintel is a representation of the 'Agnus Dei' in a roundel between two nondescript animals. The ends of the lintel appear to rest on corbels representing the heads of a king and queen, but the whole thing has been terribly scraped. In the gable over the outer doorway a stone has been inserted, on which is an interesting group of figures. It contains, in a cinquefoil-headed recess, a female figure bearing a child in its arms between two kneeling figures. Nobody seems to know for certain where this stone came from originally. Perhaps it is the head of the churchyard cross which Mr. Pooley records to have once existed here, and to have 'probably been destroyed and its ruins carted away when the nave was rebuilt.' The chancel arch has no capitals, but the plain chamfer moulding is continued down to the floor. The tower is a low square building with diagonal buttresses and a turret at the N.E. corner. The royal arms are suspended above the organ in the north aisle.

In Som. A. & N. H. S. Proc., xxiv. i. 55, mention is made of a Norman doorway and window in the lower part of the tower, but the only early work is the outer doorway and font.

PITCOMBE (S. Leonard). The church, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt in 1858. It is a good specimen of a plain perpendicular building. At the N.E. angle is a turret which terminates below the belfry stage. This has on each side a window with two lights. Below the west window is a doorway. In the west window are some good fragments of coloured glass and three shields. The fragments include complete figures of the Seraphim in coloured outline on white glass, and some smaller figures in yellow stain. The three shields bear: 1. Arg. 2 chevrons gu. (St. Maur); 2. Gu. bezantée, a canton ermine (Zouche); 3. Or. a bend betw. 6 martlets sa. (Luttrell); 2 and 3 are reversed in the glazing. The first two families were connected with Pitcombe by the ties of property, and the Luttrells succeeded the Mohuns as patrons of Bruton Priory; so this glass commemorates, firstly, the marriage of Alice St. Maur, born 1409, with William, Lord Zouche of Haryngworth; and, secondly, the transfer in 1401 of Dunster and the other property, rights and privileges, of the Mohuns the Domesday grantees to the Luttrells, their present possessors. The shield of Lovel mentioned by Phelps is not now in the church. In the tower stands a large tub-shaped Norman font, and some old oak bench ends will be found in the church. In the churchyard is a cross of which Pooley gives an illustration.

REDLYNCH (S. Peter). There was formerly a chapel here on the site now occupied by the mansion 'fast hastening to decay.' It was rebuilt in its present position about 1750. It is designed in a suppositious classical style, and Collinson calls it a truly elegant building; but there is nothing remarkable about it, except that the bell-turret is placed on the eastern gable.

SHEPTON MONTAGUE (S. Peter). A small building consisting of nave with tower on south side, the lower stage serving as porch and chancel. The oldest parts of the church are E. English in character. They are the narrow chancel arch, the mouldings descending on the capitals of dwarf engaged shafts resting on corbels. These and the capitals are carved with elegant foliage of this period. To this date also belongs a narrow single light window in the chancel, and perhaps the plain circular font which stands on a short pillar. It may, of course, be much older. The inner doorway under the tower is also of early date. Round the head runs an inscription which puzzled the Somerset Antiquarian Society on their visit in 1857 (Proc. vii. i. 19). The letters are of a Lombardic character and read: PORT ESY + D? THOMAS. The only doubtful letter comes in the place of the +; it resembles an Z with a horizontal line through the diagonal stroke. The letters are not well spaced, and the initial of the second word may really be intended for the last letter of the first; when the second would apparently represent some peculiar spelling of SAINT. The cult of S. Thomas of Canterbury and the earliest architectural details of the church synchronize, and a change of dedication is of frequent occurrence. The rest of the architecture is perpendicular. In the west wall is a doorway now walled up.

Interior. Besides the font mentioned above, there is a piscina in the south east corner of the nave, and close at hand a shallow recess which may have held a piece of sculpture or perhaps a painting. Over the chancel arch is a triangular recess which is too small to have been of any use for giving light. In the chancel is another piscina, and a priest's door now walled up. The front of the gallery, at the west end of the nave, is adorned with paintings of Old and New Testament characters. In the belfry is preserved a well carved corbel representing a woman's head, which was found in the walls during the recent restoration. On a monument to the Mogg family, who lived at Stony Stoke in this parish, is a shield bearing three crescents. The tinctures are not now visible, but Collinson gives them as ermine and gules. The same coat was on a stone formerly in Wincanton church, as the arms of Dorothy Mogg of Farrington (Gurney) second wife of Thomas Churchey (Phelps). The present arms of Mogg of Farrington are quite distinct, and this coat is really that of Kenn of Kenn. There seems to have been some connexion between the two families, as in the aisle of Shepton church is a stone bearing this inscription: 'John Mogg als. Keen Gent., who was buried May 30th, 1695.'

Another variation in the spelling occurs in Brown's Wills v. 28; Administration of goods of John Mogg als. Keynes of Bruges in Flanders to his father John Mogg als. Kaynes 15 Jan., 1678-9.

STOKE-TRISTER (S. Andrew) In 1841 the old church having become much decayed was pulled down, and a new one erected on a fresh site, midway between Stoke and Bayford. Phelps, in his account of the old church, remarks that 'a fine arch with ribbed moulding, resting on a pillar, with a capital on each side, divides the nave from the chancel.' This suggests E. E. work as at Shepton Montague; but none of the architectural features were transferred to the new church. The four bells noted by Collinson were rehung; and the monumental slab to the memory of the Rev. Charles Mitchell, who died 18 Feb., 1715-6, was relaid. It bears his arms: a chevron between 7 dragons' heads, 4 in chief and 3 in base. Crest: a hand holding a short sword.

UPTON-NOBLE (St. Mary Magd.) This out-of-the-way church consists of nave and chancel with modern vestry on the north side of the latter; a tower on the south side of the nave, the lower part serving as a porch; and a chapel on the south side of the chancel. The angles at the corners of the building are not usually right-angles. The building underwent a necessary restoration in 1879. The inner doorway has plain roll mouldings, continued down to the ground without any break. Over this door there is a small niche. The south chapel is divided from the chancel by two arches, one old the other modern. The windows of 2 and 3 lights are Tudor, almost debased. Under the window in the east wall has been inserted a stone, on which appears the outline of the Crucifixion within a circle. Traces of colour are apparent, but the whole subject has been, as far as possible, obliterated. The total height of this stone is 21 inches. The font has a circular bowl, 25 inches across, with roll mouldings resting on a modern base. Collinson mentions a monument to John Rogers, Esq., on the north wall of the chancel without; 'but the inscription is nearly effaced.' The modern vestry now provides a shelter, but too late to save the inscription, which has disappeared as well as the greater part of the coat of arms. This is a pity, as the blazon, so far as it can be discerned, does not appear to be the usual coat of that family. It is vaire (?) in chief 2 crescents.

WINCANTON (SS. Pet. and Paul). The present church is the third building that has stood here. The oldest (with the exception of the tower) was rebuilt in 1748 (Collinson); but the date and inscription on the porch of the south aisle show that it at least was built in 1735. It is of course quite likely that this part was taken in hand first, and then the rest of the building, for 'l'appetit vient en mangeant.' The construction of the main part of the building is attributed by general tradition to Nathaniel Ireson, whose effigy stands on a pedestal near the south east angle of the church. In 1889 the present church was erected, and the old monuments, with one or two exceptions, were replaced in the aisles and on the walls of the new building. Everything inside the church is new. The tower is now somewhat dwarfed by the structure behind; this suggests the idea that the original building was likewise small if the several parts were to be in keeping. In the wall of the north porch is built up a fragment of the original building—a stone portraying the legend of S. Eligius. [This is fully described in Som. Antiq. & N. H. S. Proc. xxxiii. ii. 165; and an illustration is given in S. & D. N. & Q. III. 81.] For a fuller account of Wincanton church and its monuments the reader is referred to Memorials of Wincanton People, 1896, written and published by Mr. George Sweetman of that town.

WYKE-CHAMPEFLOWER (S. Peter). The old chapel having fallen into decay, Henry Southworth, lord of the manor, rebuilt it as an annexe to his mansion and it was consecrated on the 18th July, 1524. It is a small building with a picturesque bell turret and a north porch with a room over which is part of the mansion. The illustration gives a very good idea of its general appearance. Inside, the chancel is separated from the nave by a solid screen, filling the space between the wall plates and the ceiling. The most interesting feature in the chapel is the quantity of heraldry on the windows, walls and ceiling. In the porch, on one side of the door, is a shield with the initials ^SHE—Henry and Elizabeth Southworth, on the shield on the other side, 1623. In the east window are remains of three shields in coloured glass. The middle light seems to have contained the royal arms, of which only a unicorn and a few fragments survive. In the second light is the garter encircling the plume of feathers, the badge of the Prince of Wales. The third light contains a very interesting shield. Quarterly 1 & 4, Sa. a lion ramp. or; 2 & 3, Fusily in bend arg. and az. Over all on an inescutcheon gu. an imperial orb or. Imp. the royal arms of England. This is the shield of Elizabeth, the Princess Royal of England, and of her husband Frederick, Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of Bavaria, and Elector of the Empire. Her misfortunes had evidently only still more endeared the 'Queen of hearts' to her country. On the apex of the roof of the nave are three shields, bearing the arms and initials of Henry VIII, Edward VI, and Elizabeth. On either side, above the wall plate, are other 3 shields. On the north side, counting from the west: I. Quarterly 1 & 4, Arg. a chevron betw. 3 crosses crosslet sa. (Southworth); 2 & 3 Sa., a chevron betw. 3 crosses crosslet arg. (Dayes); Impaling Gu. a bend raguly charged with a crescent sa. betw. 2 crosses crosslet arg. (Pelsett of Milton co. Cambs., and Itham, Kent, Burke's Armory, 1842). The dexter coat is the paternal arms of the refounder of the chapel, whose pedigree, in the Visit. 1623, begins with the marriage of Sir Gilbert Southworth, of Southworth Hall, Lanc., with Elizabeth d. & h. of Nich. Dayes, of Salmsburie in the same county. This coat will be alluded to hereafter as Southworth quarterly. The name of his wife is given in the Visit. as Pellsant of London, but Burke gives a different coat to that family of Clipston, co. Northants. However we may believe that Mr. Southworth gave in his wife's name correctly. II. A shield of 6 quarters. 1. Lozengy or & az., on a chev. gu. a mullet for difference the cadency mark of the third son (Gorges). 2, Arg., on a chief gu. 3 bezants (Russell). 3, Arg. a gurge az. (Gorges). 4, Or, a fesse of lozenges gu., each charged with an escallop or (Pennington). 5, Gu., a lion ramp erm. (Ouldhall). 6, Arg., a chev. betw. 3 billets erm. (*Englowise*¹). This is the shield of Sir Robert Gorge of Redlynch, third son of Sir Thomas Gorge of Langford Castle, Wilts. He was present at the Consecration. III. A quartered shield; 1, Gu., a chev. erm. betw. 10 crosses patée (Berkeley). 2, Or, a saltier engr. sa. (Botetourt). 3, Or, 2 lions pass. in pale az. (Somery). 4, Gu. 10 bezants 4, 3, 2, 1; a label of 3 points az. (Zouche). On the honour point a crescent arg. for cadency mark of second son. The shield of Sir Henry Berkeley of Yarlinton, second son of Sir Henry Berkeley of Bruton.

On the south side of the nave, counting from the west; I. Southworth (quarterly coat) with a crescent for difference, Imp.

1. See a valuable note on this shield in S. & D. N. & Q. III p. 278.

Quarterly, 1 & 4 Sa. an eagle with two heads displayed arg. (Lloyd). 2, Per fesse sa. & arg., a lion ramp. counterchanged (Einion Efell). 3, Arg., a chevr. gu. betw. 3 pheons sa. (Cadwgan Bachew). The father of Henry Southworth, Edward, a merchant of London, married Jane, d. of Edward Lloyd of Lloyenmayne co. Salop. These 4 shields seem to be a selection from a more elaborate coat given in the Salop Visit. 1623, but the tinctures in 1 & 4, and 2 have got reversed.

II. Az., a chevr. betw. 3 crescents or. Papworth gives this coat to Berkerolles, and it is confirmatory of this identification that another coat on the screen (see below) might be that of Turbeville whose heiress married Berkerolles; then the heiress of Berkerolles married Stradling (Coll. III 335) whose arms were identical with the above, except that the charges are gules. There is a considerable hiatus in the history of Wyke during the 15th and 16th centuries, and its discovery might explain the presence of these two shields.

III. Or. 3 bull's heads caboshed gu, a crescent for difference (Bull), Impaling Southworth (quarterly coat). William Bull of Shapwicke married Jane, dau. & coh. of Henry Southworth.

On the west face of the screen are the royal arms with I.R. 1624, between two shields, one bearing the arms of the see of Canterbury impaling the paternal coat of George Abbot, the archbishop; Gu. a chevr. betw. 3 pears or; the other bears the arms of the diocese of Bath and Wells with those of the bishop Arthur Lake: Sa., a bend betw. 6 crosses crosslet fitchée, arg.

There are two smaller shields bearing Az., a dolphin embowed arg. (Fitzjames). Also two figures of saints, S. Andrew with his cross, the other with a long staff. One would have expected S. Peter to whom the chapel is dedicated.

On the east face of the screen are sentences from Scripture, and two shields. The first bears: Or divided by black lines into squares, a fesse erm. The first part is, of course, impossible in heraldry, but if the painter intended to represent chequy or & sa. (Collinson gives chequy or & arg.) it would be very near that of Tuberville of Coyty, co. Glamorgan, who bore chequy or & gu., a fess erm., see above. The other shield bears Or a fesse wavy sa., Impaling Southworth quarterly coat. The first coat is no doubt that of Ducke, though by rights the fesse should be charged with 3 mascles of the field. Arthur Ducke, LL.D., married Margaret, younger daughter of Henry Southworth. For his life see Som. A. & N. H. Proc. xvi. ii. 21. Collinson gives a description of H.S.'s Monument, and the various shields on it, which may now be identified by these notes, which conclude the account of the churches in the deanery of Bruton. E. H. BATES.

P.S. In the account of the Dalton Monument in Cucklington Church (Vol. V. p. 222) the blazon of the lion in the Dalton shield should be argent instead of sable, which, though the actual colour, is of course impossible.

53. OUTLINES OF DORSET GRAMMAR.—Perhaps a short sketch of the grammar of that tongue which is still spoken with more or less purity in West Dorset may not prove uninteresting to the readers of S. & D. N. & Q.

English dialects are not what many folk fancy them to be, mere corruptions of the literary or printed language known as Queen's English, nor are they indeed corruptions at all, but a purer way of speaking, far less changed in its fashion during many ages than the present-day English of the upper classes. Thus our Dorset speech is wonderfully little altered from the West Saxon dialect in which King Alfred's writings are preserved to us, and therefore to look with contempt on the relic of such an ancient tongue is foolish, to say the least of it.

And so of all English dialects,—we find them to contain words and phrases that have now become obsolete, but which we sometimes come across in our Bible, Shakespeare, Milton, Chaucer, and other works of antiquity.

Indeed, to speak of any mode of speech different from our own as vulgar, is quite beside the mark, for no language is vulgar in itself,—its vulgarity wholly depends upon the speaker, be he prince or peasant.

With this introduction we may pass on to our subject,—Dorset Grammar.

Speaking of Gender first, the rule is that everything, living or lifeless, if in a bodily form, is masculine, 'he' being used of a church, a key, a knife, or a stone. 'It' will then be used of stone in the abstract quantity, water, rubbish, etc., while the feminine is confined to females.

Of the Articles, the Definite article is the same as in literary English, and all we need remark about its use is, that it is often omitted on the same principle which prompts us to talk of going to 'church' or 'market,' instead of 'the church' or 'the market.' The most familiar examples of this extended use are perhaps the expressions 'down (to) Cobb' [Lyme Regis], 'in house' (at home), 'Mr. — to shop,' 'throw him over hedge.' It is also inserted, as a generic word, as in the phrase, 'same as the children do' (=as all children do). There is only one form of the Indefinite Article, standing before vowels and consonants alike,—'a.' This is a departure from Old English usage, in which 'an' was the sole form. Modern English has softened 'an' down to 'a' before consonants, but in Dorset 'an' has been softened away altogether. This article is also used to "substantive" the object of a qualifying about. e.g. 'in about a half a hour,' 'about a five minutes ago'; for which we may compare 'about an hour,' and S. Luke ix. 28 (A.V.).

Nouns are much used as in conventional English. 'Chicken' is only used as the plural of 'chick'; 'vuzzen' is probably a plural form of 'vuzzy,' both words being in use. 'Housen,' as in Oxfordshire, is still heard among us. 'Broth' is a plural noun, while 'things' (=stock) is singular: e.g. 'give us a few broth,' 'tis a shame to keep things and then starve it.'

Favourite Adjectives of emphasis are 'terrible,' 'main,' 'banging' and others. The first of these is used, like the popular slang 'awfully,' quite irrespective of sense, as of a horse, 'ter'ble quite' (very quiet). The last is an epithet of size, qualifying 'great.' Duplicates are rather common, as 'great big,' 'ancient old,' 'certain sure.'

'Plenty' is used as an adjective, as we use in standard English the word 'plentiful.' Adjectives of material are very faithful in keeping their old termination -en. We still say in common English, 'wooden'; but 'leaden,' 'waxen,' and others are fast going out of use, while 'papern,' 'timbern' and many more are now confined to west country speech.

Our Dorset Pronouns are a sore trial to the schoolmaster, who finds what he supposes to be a most lamentably ungrammatical style in the rustic's everyday talk. However, before we discuss the Dorset pronouns, let us bear this in mind, that rules of grammar were made for language, and not language for grammar; in other words, grammar is an artificial help towards learning a new language, by grouping classes of words and constructions (more properly Syntax) into rules, so far as possible, and putting all breaches of these grammatical rules under the heading of Exceptions. Now, Dorset grammar is very unlike English grammar, but there can be ungrammatical Dorset just as much as ungrammatical English. For example take up any story book which contains dialogues in dialect, and ten to one you will, if you know the dialect well enough, come across many mistakes and impossible words or constructions in it. And so, when a dialect speaker tries to copy gentlefolks' ways of speaking, he breaks his rules and produces a comic mixture of country talk and polite English, which does become a corrupt tongue then, if you like.

The rule of Dorset pronouns is, that objective cases become subjective in every instance, except when they are used purely unemphatically. A few examples will best show what is meant:— 'tidden meant for we, 'tis meant for they'; 'let I do 't'; 'I didn't see he there.' The emphatic is pronounced full, the unemphatic is contracted, thus:— 'do 'e vote for we,' 'do 'e vote var's,' meaning respectively, 'vote for us,' 'do vote for us.' 'Gie I thik' is more commonly heard than 'gie en to me,' though the latter is perfectly correct, the vowel in 'me' being short, like that in 'the' and 'to' in ordinary rapid speech. 'Between you and I' is Dorset grammar, but not English, though it is often heard now from educated speakers. The subjective case, however, becomes objective, when pronoun and verb are inverted, as in asking a question, except when the pronoun is emphatic; thus,

'can us go?' is unemphatic, 'can we go?' or 'can I go?' emphatic: 'can 'em do it, can 'em?' (unemphatic); 'can they do it, can 'em?' (emphatic).

Dorset, like all country dialects, so far as I know, (cockney being of course excluded, which follows polite usage) preserves the homely thou, thee, thy, thine, all however in one form—'thee,' standing for personal and possessive, subjective and objective alike. The loss of this second person singular makes a great want in the literary tongue.

It is used, still in poetry, to be sure, and in addressing God; but this useful word is otherwise dead, which in our English dialects marks homeliness, familiarity, (whether natural or assumed), a sense of social superiority, contempt or anger. 'Thee wash thee face' illustrates its double capacity. 'He' becomes 'a, as in Shakespeare. 'She' broader, thus, her. This her looks uncommonly like the objective used subjectively, but scholars tell us it is a remnant of the Anglo-Saxon for 'she' (heo): 'N or en, (i.e. him) is plainly the A.S. accusative hine, our modern 'him' being properly a dative which has usurped its place. We can thus in Dorset easily distinguish between 'knock'n down' and 'knock 'm down,' whereas in ordinary speech the latter may refer indifferently to a single or a plural object. But note this moreover, that 'knock'n down' stands also for 'knock it down,' besides meaning 'knock him down,' since any material thing in Dorset is masculine, not neuter. So we see that while Dorset gains in clearness one way, modern English gains in another. The possessive case is 'his' (pronounced as if=he's) or o'n (=of him). Where neuter or immaterial things are referred to, the genitive is o't (=of it); e.g. 'the wheel o'n's a-broked (its wheel is broken), 'the smell o't' (its smell, as of manure); cp. 'I be glad o't.' 'Tidden he's, 'tis mine.' Thus it will be seen that the barbarous modern word 'its' is as unknown in pure Dorset as it was to the translators of our Authorised Version, or to Shakspeare. A word which looks rather like it at first sight—'a's'—is in reality nothing but 'his,' 'a standing for 'he' (unemphatic), as remarked above. 'It,' when combined with 'is,' becomes 'tis, never it's. 'Them,' in the phrase 'them things,' etc., is unknown in West Dorset, and when heard in an importation, like the word 'aint,' and other cockneyisms, often marking an attempt, on the part of the speaker, to talk 'fine' (i.e. in the most genteel English possible). 'They things 'll do,' or, 'take they things away,' this is the W. Dorset idiom. 'You,'—sometimes in the subjective case (purely unemphatic), and always in the objective except where emphatic,—becomes 'ye,' the y, however, being silent. So in Spenser 'you' as a nominative is emphatic, 'ye' unemphatic. So much for the personal pronouns. The reflexive pronouns are more consistent than in English, 'his-self,' 'their-selves' being used, analogous to my-self, her-self, our-selves, your-selves.

The Demonstratives are fuller than in English, there being a nice distinction in Dorset between masculine and neuter, and the pronoun agreeing with its noun in gender. 'This' is only used in Dorset for the neuter, as in Anglo-Saxon (where the masculine and neuter have separate forms), the A.S. thes (masc.) being represented by the Dorset 'these.' The masculine form of 'that' in Dorset is 'thik,' a true descendant of thilke (Chaucer, Spenser). Let us illustrate this distinction by the help of one or two examples. 'Take thik spade, and carr' that dung away.' 'Empt' these pail, and bring on some o'this here water.' 'Thik water,' if it meant anything, would stand for some definite stream or part of a river.

The typical west country preposition is 'to,' standing for the 'at' of literary talk. 'Idden many volks to Lyme toyear,' 'I zeed en in to shop.' 'Inside' and 'outside,' as prepositions are always followed by 'of.'

Adverbs of place are often redundant, e.g. 'athirt 'n' across,' 'up top,' 'down in under.' The adverbial ending -ly preserves its ancient Saxon form 'like,' often modifying the epithet, and is used, altogether, more freely than in English: 'I knowed she very well like,' 'How be you getting on, like?' 'They come up so quick like.'

Verbs have some peculiarities on the Dorset tongue. Who that has stayed for even a short time in the county can have failed to remark the auxiliary verb do, not only used as a frequentative, but appearing in nearly every other sentence? The corresponding did is almost confined to frequentative use, and may be styled a 'customary aorist,'—it is therefore much less commonly heard. As examples of the two forms, we may take the following:—'We d'arvees mulky 'boud o' vive,' i.e. We (do) always milk about (of) five (o'clock), and, 'Her's a good leädy. Did come 'most every wick ver (to) zec my bwoy when he wer bad,'—this explains itself.

The Dorset use is exactly illustrated in the following verse from our Authorised Version, although it must be added that many other Bible passages exhibit no such agreement:—'But the Philistines took him (Samson), and put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and bound him with fetters of brass; and he did grind in the prison house.' (Judg. xvi. 21). This auxiliary do, moreover, sometimes appears in familiar passages of our Prayer Book, e.g., 'As we do put our trust in thee' (litany); 'We thine unworthy servants do give thee most humble and hearty thanks' (gen. thanksgiving). Intransitive verbs (active voice) have their peculiarities. Thus -y (according to some scholars a remnant of -ian, the old A.S. infin.) terminates the infinitive, especially when used in a frequentative sense; while -éd, fully inflected, terminates the preterite indicative and past participle of certain words used absolutely, where in polite English we follow the clipped form usually found in poetry.

A former example, under do, shows the intransitive ending, used frequently ('milky')—here is another:—'Dont'e (pron. daunny) dringy zoo' (i.e. don't squeeze so). This form is particularly noticeable in the case of verbs describing some branch of rural work, e.g. milky, thatchy, reapy, hedge-carpentry, masonry, etc.

For the fully-inflected -ed, we may illustrate as follows:—
'Do'e know dhatcher Toms? Poor wold man, he 'ant a-dhatched 's yers.' (Do you know thatcher Toms? Poor old man, he hasn't thatched these years). 'Our cow calvéd yesterday.'

While speaking of -y added to verbs, we may compare the omission of -y in some verbs naturally ending with that letter, e.g. empt, carr; as, 'Ca's thee carr' my leedle maid, 's dhink?' = Canst thou carry my little girl, dost think? (Little has many forms,—liddle, leedle, lill, leel).

So far as I am aware, the soft-sounding -th for -s only survives in euphonious Devon, where it is used very irregularly with the different personal pronouns in agreement: for instance, in asking your way you are told that such and such a place 'lieth' in this or that direction; or, of certain people, that they 'liv'th' in such a house.

In the somewhat peculiar sub-dialect spoken around Lyme Regis, the verb to be inclines to the Devon forms, thus—

I be	We'm
Thee art	You'm
He is	They'm,

wheras in Dorset proper, Thee bist, 'A be, We be, etc., is the usual form. Our verbs show the redundancy of construction so characteristic of dialect, such as—'I be gwain, I be,' 'Dheck man's a fool, I tull 'e, ees aiz' (that man's a fool, I tell you, yes he is).

The verb To Be is thus conjugated interrogatively, in the present tense:—

I be gwain, ben us?	We'm gwain, ben us?
Thee't gwain, atn?	(We be gwain, ben us? &c.)
(Thee's gwain, bisn?)	You'm gwain, ben 'e?
He's gwain, edn er?	They'm gwain, ben em?
(He be gwain, ben er?)

And in the same way negatively,—'I ben gwain, be us?' &c.

The past partic. of To Go is Went, not Gone, after have or had, as

'They didn' ought to a (=have) went,'
'When I come(d) back, he'd a-went.'

Negatives are piled up as in other districts,—take the following example:—'I never didn' zee no jish thing, no I didn'.'

54. VICARAGE HOUSE, CONGRESBURY.—In the proceedings of the Som. Arch. & Nat. Hist. Society, Vol. X. Part 1, p. 30, is an account of the Rectory (? Vicarage) House, Congresbury, Somerset.

It is stated to have been "built about 1470 by the Executors of Bishop Beckington, the arms over the doorway, cut in the original stonework, being those of the see of Wells, and of the executors, Pope, Sugar, and Swann, the same as in the Vicars Close at Wells," &c. An engraving of the porch and of the shields in question faces p. 9 of the same volume. In a note by the Editor, the late Rev. W. A. Jones (then secretary) he states that an error occurs as to the arms in question, and that "they are those of the see of Wells, of Beckington, and Pope, one of his executors."

The arms "over the doorway" are those of Bishop Beckington (Arg.) on a fesse (az.) a mitre with labels expanded (or) between 3 bucks' heads cabossed (gu.) in chief, and as many pheons (sa.) in base. On the dexter side, as shewn, correctly, by the illustration, are the arms of the See.

But the arms on the sinister side are "A fesse dancettée in chief 3 leopards' heads cabossed." Mr. Jones says, the arms of Pope. Now the arms of Pope, as seen in the Vicars Close, are (Arg.) a chev. (sa.) between in chief two roses (gu.) and in base a talbot passant (of the last) Jewers' Wells Cathedral 274.

Bishop Robert Stillington held the living for 9 months only, 1447-8, and it has been suggested that the arms are his. But the arms of Bishop Stillington, as blazoned in Wells Cathedral, are Gu. a chev. arg. being 3 leopards faces or—a variation from his family coat, Gu. on a fesse arg. between 3 leopards faces or as many fleurs-de-lis sa. Heraldically, there is a wide difference in the bearings, and to treat those at Congresbury as being those of Stillington, we must assume that he adopted first one personal variation from his family coat, and subsequently another.

Bishop Beckington presided over the diocese, 1443 to 1464, and during that period, and for some period both before and after, no Dean of Wells or Incumbent of the parish appears to have bearings at all similar to those under consideration.

The arms of the family of "Pountney" or "Pulteney" are Arg. a fess dancettée (or indented) gu. in chief 3 leopards heads cabossed sa.—identical so far as the bearings are concerned; the tinctures are not of course shewn in the carving. The only similar coat given by Papworth (715) is Arg. a fesse indented and 3 leopards heads in chief sable, for Greeve.

The Pulteneys were, in the 18th century, intimately connected with the county in the person of the celebrated statesman the Earl of Bath, who had considerable estates not only in that city but also in Wrington, the adjoining parish to Congresbury. But the connection was comparatively a short one, and did not commence till 1726. Of Poultney and Greeve I can find no trace as connected with the county or locality.

Can any of your readers throw any light on the subject?

56. BRUTON REGISTERS.—I recently spent a few hours in looking over the two oldest registers at Bruton. The first begins in 1554 and goes down to 1649. The last entry is a touching one.

"The 6th day of January 1649 24 years."

No name; but what appears to be R; either for Rex or Regnavit.

The rest of the leaf has been cut away, perhaps by some "Register" in the time of the Commonwealth.

Charles II's restoration is thus alluded to—1660 May 10 King Charles the 2d first proclaimed at Brewton Cross by me Edward Drew, Register, 1660.

May 28. We rendezvous at Mayes downe and proclaymed him again.

May 29. The Mayden troop went to Crich Hill to solemnize his birthday.

Mr. Edward Drew was Register in the time of the Commonwealth. He occasionally "drops into poetry," and I think all the following pieces are to be ascribed to his pen; only one of them being signed with his initials.

On his tombstone which still exists he is described as "clerk". He was buried 24 April, 1668.

This yeare
Brewtons ffeare

These words are written against the month of March, 1641, in which there were no less than eleven burials.

1642.

All Praise and thanks to God still give ffor our deliverance Mathias eve
By his great power wee put to flight
Our rageing foes that Thursday night *
Who came to Plunder, Burne, & Slay
And quite Consume us ere the day.
Thus he our feeble force supplide
In weaknes, most he's magnifide
Serve God with fear, on him depend
As then, soe ever he will defende.

1647.

By ffurious flames this 13th day of Aguste
Brewton was like to be consumed to dust
But God in mercy, quenched those flames indeed
As then so allwayes hees our help at need.

E. D.

Mr. Drew had died before 1673, so another scribe must have written the following entries, to which he has called attention by framing them within lines.

1673 The 18th of September Bishopp Mews of this Diocess visitation was at Brewton.

* These words have been altered by another hand to "the Batcombmities."

- 1679 Memorandum Sunday the 23d. day of this moneth November was preached a sermon in Brewton Church in the morning by Bishopp Mewes bishopp of Bath and Wells.

Tramps were not unknown in the days of Good Queen Bess, as the three following entries shew :

- 1571 May 3 a poore walkinge boy was buried.
 1590 Apr 28 a poore walkinge man buried.
 1594 Dec 30 a poore walkinge woman buried.

The following entry is interesting as giving the name of one of the old inns at Brewton :

- 1588 Dec 9. George bathrin gent. died at the hart and caried to loockam [Luccombe] to be buried.

He was of Witchanger in the parish of Luccombe and his will is at Somerset House [P.C.C. Leicester 17.]

The great Norman family of Tregoz which gave its name to Liddiard-Tregoz in Wiltshire, and also had estates in Somerset, is represented by humble descendants at Bruton, an illustration of a fact which is often alluded to by Hardy in "Tess of the Durbervilles."

- 1598 Oct 23 Paule Tregose & Katherin Sevogle married.
 1620-1 Jan 15 Wm. Smartt & Katherin Traygoose married.
 1621 Sept 18 John Ash & Alice Traygoose married.

While another entry also enclosed by lines moves our wonder and rouses our curiosity.

- 1663 Mrs. Sedbury was buried June 1 being kept a yeare & half unburied.

Here is an early instance of a centenarian.

- 1666-7 March 7 Barbara Hannam 100 yeare old.

The registers are continuous from 1554 to the present day; in one year (1577) there were no burials. In the early register the names of Ames and Wilton are those which occur most often. One of the first named family went to America and within the last few years his descendants have put up a window in Bruton Church.

59. SIR JOHN SHUTE.—In the burials in Horsington Register occurs—Sir John Shute buried 2 June, 1559. Presumably the title indicates a parson. The name does not occur in the Index to Mr. Weaver's Somerset Incumbents. Was he the Incumbent of some neighbouring parish in Dorset or Wilts?

W. E. DANIEL.

60. THE MAGPIE.—Are two varieties of Magpie generally believed to exist in England? A keeper affirms that there are two sorts not differing in plumage, but in their nesting. The "Tree Magpie" and the "Bush Magpie" he calls them, from their respective choice of abode. This came out incidentally in his answer to an enquiry about the Dorset use of "Eggiste" = Magpie. He does not know this as a Dorset name for the bird, but has heard it in Lincolnshire.

61. FROGMORE IN GREAT TOLLER, DORSET.—Who owned this farm during the hundred years which preceded the accession of George III? It was sold in 1770, when its extent was 240 acres, to the Brownes of Frampton by Mr. Thomas Pope of Toller Whelme, but I have been unable to discover how or when it came into the hands of the latter. The grandfather of the above Thomas (William Pope) bought some freehold in Great Toller in 1692, but this was no doubt a different property, being situated in Higher Kingcombe. Any information tending to throw light on the subject would be acceptable.

62. REMAINS OF PLEISTOCENE MAMMALIA AT UPHILL, SOMERSET.—In the month of April an exploration of certain caves situated at the southern end of a quarry in the carboniferous limestone at Uphill was commenced, on behalf of the Committee of the Bristol Museum, by Mr. Edward Wilson, F.G.S., the Curator of the Museum, who, I regret to say, died before the completion of the work.

The remains were found in two caves, which, for the sake of convenience, have been designated respectively "The Upper Cave" and "The Lower Cave." The upper cave is situated very near to the wall of the Churchyard of the ancient parish church of Uphill. Below the upper cave another cave was discovered which has a stalagmitic floor, but so far no remains have been found therein; judging from certain indications, which have been disclosed as the result of recent blasts in this portion of the quarry, it will not be a matter for surprise if it should eventually be demonstrated that at some period in the remote past all the caves and fissures—at any rate all those in close proximity to the upper cave—were connected together. It should also be mentioned that the face of the quarry at the extreme southernmost point shows evidence of the existence of another cave containing a deposit of dark purplish red soft sandy marl. The tendency of the formation of the caves is to follow the bedding planes, and it is not improbable that the last mentioned cave passes into the lower cave. In the upper cave the remains of Mammoth, Cave Bear, Rhinoceros, Hyæna, Ox, Bison, Horse, Fox, &c., were found in the cave deposits; having regard to the fact that the coprolites of Hyænas were found at different points in a deposit of greenish yellow soft sandy soil, it is not unreasonable to conclude that the cave was at one time inhabited by Hyænas. In connection with similar discoveries of organic remains, it is frequently a matter for consideration, as to how the remains were brought to the place of deposit; the better opinions, I think, incline to affirm that in the majority of cases the remains were brought by wild beasts—hyænas or cave bears—during the time the caves were occupied by them.

Similar specimens were met with in the lower cave; it is however very important to note that three nodules of flint and a considerable number of worked flints—including an arrow head—were discovered in this cave. At the time the Bristol Museum Committee made arrangements with the lessee of the quarry to proceed with the exploration it was known that some worked flints (scrapers or skinning knives) had been discovered, consequently the greatest care was exercised. During the excavations and subsequently, the spoil heaps at the base of the quarry underwent careful examination; notwithstanding these precautions it is known that some worked flints have passed into the hands of certain persons. Judging from the result of enquiries made by me I have come to the conclusion that the recent discovery at Uphill adds no new knowledge as to the general features of the Mendip caves, save and except so far as the presence of worked flints may be regarded as evidence of their contemporaneity with the organic remains.

For the privileges granted in this Charter the men of Dorset and Somerset were to pay 1200 marks to the king, the payment of 200 marks of which sum and their debt for the remainder is entered on the Pipe Roll 12 John, roll 7, quoted in Madox, *Hist. 64. THE DAIRY HOUSE, LONG BURTON.—The Dorset illustration in the current number represents a picturesque house, of about the beginning of the 17th century, standing in the village street of Long Burton, facing south. It was partially destroyed by fire on 1st Dec., 1886, but the portion now delineated fortunately escaped. This was probably erected by Sir John Fitzjames of Leweston (who died 16th May, 1625, aged 77) the then owner of Long Burton. He was blessed with a numerous family of sons, and while the eldest, Leweston Fitzjames, was destined to inherit the paternal acres, the younger sons were settled as tenants or leaseholders on farms about the property. Thus, Ralph Fitzjames was domiciled at Stockbridge, in the parish of Lillington, John and Robert at Holnest, and Thomas at Long Burton. We may conjecture that this house may have been built as a residence for Thomas Fitzjames, or at any rate have been occupied by him.

There is an old house near Holnest church, with a stone bearing date 1610, and the farm house at Rye Water in Holnest, rebuilt a few years ago, was dated 1622. The erection of these may also be conjecturally ascribed to Sir John Fitzjames, or his leaseholding tenants.

We are indebted to the Rev. E. Collett for the photograph from which the present illustration is derived.

65. EXTRACT FROM THE DIARY OF CELIA FIENNES (c. 1700.)—‘From Stonidge I went to Evell in Somersetshire, thence to Meer a little town about 15 mile; by the town is a vast high hill called the Castle of Meer—its now all grass over and so steepe up that the ascent is by footsteps cut in the side of the hill. I was on the top where some had been digging and was come to a space that was Arched and the walls plaistred and washed white and smooth—it was but a little roome, I tooke a piece of its walls and plaister. That shews there may be Cells or vaults in the hill—from thence to Wincanton 7 miles which is on a steep hill and very stoney—you go through the town all the way down as it were a steep precipice, all Rocks—thence to Castle Cary 3 or 4 miles—its generally a good fruitfull Country, much on jnclosures as is most of Summersetshire.

Thence to Alford 2 miles where was a minerall water which Company resorts to for drinking—formerly it has been more frequented than of late—many now send for them severall miles and have Beer brewed of them—there being no good accomodation for people of fashion, the Country people being a Clownish rude people. Ye waters are mostly from Alom—its a Cleare little well and a quick spring—the bottom of the well has a sort of Blewish Clay or Marle, its a quick purger, good for all sharpe Humers or Obstruction.

In three mile of this place is Queen Camell famous for a fine ring of bells and for the fine sort of brown thread called Nuns thread—as we returned from thence we came by Bruton a very neate stone built town—from it we ascend a very high steep hill all in a narrow Lane cut out of the rocks, it smells Just like the sea. We were full an hour passing that hill though with four horses and a Chariot. My sister self and Maid: thence to Willding which is a place of much water, so to Newtontony in all 30 miles.’ (From Through England on a Side Saddle in the time of William and Mary. London, 1888.)

Notes :—

Stonidge = Stonehenge. Evell = Yeovil.

Alom = Alham or Alhampton.

The ‘narrow lane’ out of Bruton is probably ‘Dropping Lane.’ Willding = Wilton.

Newtontony was the Fiennes’ residence near Amesbury.

The above is from the Charter Roll at the Record Office, marked as giving copies of the charters of the eighth and two following years of Edward IV. The precise year is not specified. The 8th Edward IV began 4th March, 1468. The November 23rd of the charter must belong to that year. "Thomas [Rotheram] Roffensis," Keeper of the Privy Seal, who signs it, was only Bp. of Rochester from 1468 to 1472. Of the other signatories, the Abp. of York and the Duke of Clarence were in revolt, and Richard Earl Rivers killed, before the closing months of 1469. The other signatures do not fix the year to 1468 quite so closely, but are all consistent with it. "Thomas [Bourchier] Cardinal of Canterbury" was named as Cardinal by Paul II, 18th September, 1467, though the hat did not arrive till 1473, from Sixtus IV. George Neville, Abp. of York, was Lord Chancellor both before 1467, and after 1470; but between those dates was superseded by Robert Stillington, Bp. of Bath and Wells, here described as "our Chancellor of England." For Stillington and his chapel in Wells Cathedral, see papers by the Dean of Wells, Canon Church, and Mr. E. Buckle, in the Proceedings of the Somerset Arch. Soc. for 1894. Henry Bouchier, Earl of Essex, is described as Seneschal or Steward of the King's Household: he had been treasurer of England from May 29th, 1455, to October 5th, 1456, and held that office again in 1471-2; but when the charter was signed the "Treasurer of England" was Richard, Earl Rivers, created an earl in 1466, put to death in 1469. He was succeeded as earl by his son Anthony Woodville, who having married the daughter and heiress of Thomas de Scales, was commonly known at the time of the signing of the charter by the courtesy title of Lord Scales: he is here described as "Anthony de Scales, knight"; he was one of the foremost knights of the day, and victor in a famous tournament. He was also a patron of Caxton's, and translated for him, from the French, "The dictes and sayings of the philosophers"; with an interesting autobiographical preface. "Knight" is also the description of William Hastynges, better known as Lord Hastings; he, and Anthony Earl Rivers, were put to death by Richard III in 1483, who here signs with them as the King's "very dear brother Richard Duke of Gloucester."

The signatures to this long forgotten charter raise before the mind outlines, like those of an instantaneous photograph, of well known men grouped round Edward IV at a critical period of his reign. Abp. Neville and the Duke of Clarence, disgusted by the promotion of the Woodvilles, were just about to restore for a brief period the puppet king whom Edward had dethroned. The elder Rivers, father of Edward's queen, was soon to be sacrificed to their jealousy. His distinguished son, as well as the loyal and able Hastings were doomed to fall later victims to Richard of Gloucester. The brothers Bouchier, themselves Plantaganets, and as worthy of note as any in the group, were to remain unswerving in their support. It was by Edward's influence that the younger brother had been made Abp. of Canterbury while Henry still reigned. Considering himself released from allegiance to his imbecile predecessor he consented to crown the newly elected king. At nearly eighty years of age, with little choice of his own, he had to do the same office for Richard III; and in the last year of his long life officiated at the marriage and coronation of Henry VII and Edward's daughter, the White Rose of York.

As to the contents of the Charter, the market and fairs have been considerably changed since their first foundation.

The charter grants a market for Thursday in each week; with fairs on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Phillip and St. James' Day, and St. Margaret's Day, May 1st and July 20th respectively. The market at present is held on alternate Tuesdays and the fairs on a Tuesday in Lent, May 1st, and the Tuesday in Whitsun Week,—May the 1st being the only date retained from the original charter.

In Whatley's Gazetteer, 1751, we read that there was then at Castle Cary "a Market on Tuesday and fairs on the T. before Palm Sunday and May 1st."

It is to Mr. Macmillan's kindness that I owe the knowledge and a copy (since compared with the original) of the charter; he has also collected the following notices about the fairs and markets at different dates:—

Collinson, in 1791, says "This town has a charter for holding a market on Tuesdays, but it has been long discontinued, except that markets for corn, sheep and cattle are occasionally held from Allhallow tide to Easter. . . . There are three fairs; on the Tuesday se'nnight before Easter, the first of May, and Whit Tuesday."

In a Directory of 1793, quoted in Mr. Macmillan's Castle Cary Visitor, i. 29, the Lent Fair is given as taking place on "Mid Lent Tuesday."

Cooke in 1820 copies Collinson. Pigot's Directory, 1831, says "The weekly market has almost sunk into disuse; but there are seven cattle markets still kept up on the seven Tuesdays before Christmas Day. Fairs: Tuesday after Palm Sunday, May 1st, and Whit Tuesday."

What is the history between the original charter and the modern practice? We only know from incidental notice in the time of Queen Elizabeth that the market was in full force in her reign.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

67. THE LIFE OF S. HUGH OF LINCOLN, translated from the French Carthusian Life, and edited with large additions by H. Thurston, S.J. Burnes & Oates, 1898. (10s. 6d.)

S. Hugh is one of those who are not for an age but for all time, and his life of labour in love must ever be regarded as a noble example of work done under every kind of difficulty. He was fortunate, too, in having a Boswell, for these people always seem to regard the subject of their labours from exactly the opposite point of view that a valet would take. But S. Hugh's character is writ so clearly in his words and actions that no panegyrist is necessary, his greatest failing being apparently a habit of keeping his guests waiting until he had officiated at some chance funeral in the nearest churchyard.

The editor's notes are useful, and in the case of the date of S. Hugh's coming to Witham must certainly settle this in favour of a much later year than has hitherto been supposed; and this, of course, postdates the original settlement itself. He quotes the Bruton Cartulary, No. 381, as giving the precise date of the foundation, 28 Hen. II, 1181-2; though he is careful to point out that the 'memorandum' errs in describing the Archbishop of Canterbury as Baldwin, who did not succeed until 1185. Then, a vision seen by Prior Basil of the Grand Chartreuse took place a few days before his death in 1179, yet before S. Hugh had started for Witham. Further, in 1180, there are entries in the Norman Exchequer Rolls concerning the passage of the brothers of the Charterhouse into England, and the cost of their living in Normandy. To this it may be added that in the Pipe Roll for 21 Hen. II, 1174-5, Witham is still held by the royal tenant William fitz-John. As the debateable period is so narrowed down, a very brief study of the Pipe Rolls should settle the question for good and all.

The editor has been careful to avoid controversial matters, and his example has been followed, but we must express our regret that he should have thought it necessary to defend the Bishop's action as regards appropriations to religious houses. That a king should have diverted parochial revenues to the needs of a courtier was an abuse that S. Hugh might have been expected to denounce, but not to imitate; and an argument that the surplus might go to supporting a monastery one hundred miles away (equal to one thousand now) reminds us too much of a certain adage about robbing Peter to pay Paul. Here and here only S. Hugh seems to have been unequal to himself. A.

68. THE POPULAR GUIDE TO CORFE CASTLE, the ruins, the church, the parish and the borough. By R. Grosvenor Bartlett. [1898] Southampton: Printed by Cox & Sharland, 150, High Street. Cr. 8vo. Pp. 67. 6d.

A Guide-Book, written by a competent hand, is always welcome, and the 'Popular Guide to Corfe Castle', by Rev. R. Grosvenor Bartlett, a frequent contributor to S. & D. N. & Q., is no exception.

The 67 pages of which the Guide consists are divided into 12 sections, dealing with the Early History of Corfe, the Castle and its Siege, the Church and Clergy, the Parish, the Borough and its Mayors, &c. A Chronological Table is also added of the chief events in the history of the Castle.

To this summary of the Contents we need only add that the account is well and accurately put together, and will more than repay the modest sum needed to acquire it.

Corfe, from the interest of its ruins, and from the air of romance which attaches to its earlier and later history, will always continue to be an attraction to the Tourist, and we advise him that he cannot do better than avail himself of Mr. Bartlett's capable assistance, when he contemplates a visit in this quarter.

69. DORSET CLERGY.—In the Bristol Consistory Court are 8 volumes containing names of persons who at various dates between 1619 and 1719 subscribed to the Oath of Supremacy, to the 39 Articles, &c., at the time they were admitted as Deacons or Priests, or were instituted as Rectors or Vicars of various parishes in the Archdeaconry of Dorset and Deanery of Bristol.

The value of these subscriptions consists, first, in their being specimens of the persons' own handwriting, for not only the signature but the whole form of oath was written out in full (in nearly every instance) by the subscriber himself, and, secondly, in fixing the exact date of their institution to a benefice or to their becoming Deacons or Priests.

It will be found that many names here given are not mentioned by Hutchins in his History of Dorset under the various parishes, so a completer list can thus be formed.

Vol. 9, though not of the same character as the previous 8 vols., is here given as it follows in sequence of date. It appears to be a register of the Presentations to livings in the Archdeaconry of Dorset between the years 1714 and 1738. Two pages at one opening are ruled into 5 columns—the first headed Persons instituted (and the Living); 2nd, By whom presented and in what right; 3rd, Testimonials; 4th, Time; 5th, Place at which the documents were signed.

The contents of the 3rd and 5th columns are not here given as not being of vital consequence.

The Editor wishes to return his best thanks to the Diocesan Registrar, Mr. Wm. Hurle Clarke, for his kindness in allowing him access to the volumes.

Vol. I.

Book No. 1 measures 8 in. long by 6 in. wide, and contains altogether 77 leaves that have been written upon, besides some blank ones. It is commenced at both ends. Taking one end first;

The oath of Canonical Obedience, of Supremacy and against Simony and the 3 Articles in the 36th Canon that ministers were to subscribe to are set out in full. The earliest date is 14 July, 1619, and they run pretty regularly to June, 1622, then there are 4 only from 10 June, 1637, to 28 Mch., 1639, then they run regularly from 4 Feb., 1660-1, to 4 Mch., 1666-7. This occupies 29 leaves, when the entries end and 15 blank leaves follow. Four leaves are now occupied (the book being reversed) by entries ranging from 1620-1633 of persons subscribing to the 3 Articles only, when after 1 blank leaf is a catalogue of Bishops, Deans, &c., from the foundation of the See to about 1738.

The other end of the book commences with the 3 oaths set out in full but not the 3 Articles in the 36th Canon. The first 3 persons sign only the Declaration against taking up arms against the King. Then follow 36 leaves of names of persons subscribing to the 3 Articles only, and range from 1628 to 1673. Those who were to teach school subscribed only to the 1st and 3rd of these Articles.

The statements appear in most instances to have been written out and signed by the subscriber himself, and are mostly in Latin. Where a name is in brackets it indicates that the spelling varies.

* These entries are crossed out, and the words 'non subscripsit' added. 'Ego Franciscus Crosse in artibus Magister Rector de Chard Lynch in Com' Som'set ante admissionem meam in sacrum Diaconatus ordinem libenter et ex animo subscribo tribus ar'lis in tricesimo sexto Canone comprehensis et omnibus in ijs contentis Dat' decimo Quarto die mensis Augusti Anno Dni 1662.' The same is repeated with the word 'Presbiterij' for 'Diaconatus.'

This entry is interesting, showing that Crosse, who was intruding Rector of Charlinch, had intended to offer himself for ordination as Deacon and Priest, and the forms were written out for that purpose, but at the last moment he refused to subscribe, and the entries were crossed off, and the words 'non subscripsit,' written under each.

THE WHITSTONE.

70. WHITSTONE.—As the traveller by the local line pursues his leisurely course from Evercreech-New to Shepton Mallet, he will notice from the viaduct the little valley of Prestleigh running up between the hills to the north-east. Near the head of the valley on the north side, and almost on the sky-line (here nearly 700 ft. above sea-level) is a hedge, behind which is a lane leading from Whitstone farm into some outlying fields. In this hedge, facing southward, stands the monolith which has given its name to the farm, the hill and the Hundred. Its height above ground is $4\frac{1}{2}$ ft., greatest width $3\frac{1}{3}$ ft., greatest depth from front to back $1\frac{5}{12}$ ft. It is four-sided, the broadest sides facing S.S.W. and N.N.E. These sides are fairly even, as if they followed the original bedding of the stone. The ends are now broken in outline. The top and upper portions of the sides are lined with fissures, and deeply pitted.

The Rev. H. H. Winwood has kindly given the following report on some specimens submitted to him:—"They belong to the Jurassic system and are oolitic in texture, particularly that from the 'Whitestone.' The shell is too much broken to decide whether it is a Pecten or Lima, but I think the former, as the ribs have the ornamentation of some of the great oolite Pectens. From the broken surface you can easily see the oolitic structure, the little egg-like grains being very distinct. The action of the rain and weather on the 'Whitestone' has discoloured the surface and enabled lichens to grow in the interstices of the rock, thus changing its white appearance (hence the name possibly) to its present dirty-brown colour and pitted surface. The Whitestone is therefore of local origin."

Other Hundreds named after monoliths in the county are Stone (and Yeovil), Bemstone and Bulston (and Abdick). The stones of the first two places are known, but Bulstone does not seem to be on record. Among the knights of Richard del Estre in 1166 was Baldwin de Bolestone (Lib. Rub. 232).

[Our thanks are due to Mr. Cloudesley D'Aeth for the excellent photograph.—THE EDITORS.]

71. HUNDRED OF ABDICK AND BULSTONE.—In Vol. I. of S. & D. N. & Q., on p. 104, a query occurs with regard to the derivation of the above names, which so far, I think, has never been satisfactorily answered. As is well known, this hundred includes what were originally two distinct hundreds, and the parishes peculiar to each may still be defined from old returns. The first syllable of Ab-dick refers to an abbey, that abbey being Muchelney; and dick is the same as dyke or ditch. This is still more apparent if we refer to older forms of this name. In an Inquisition p. m. of 42 Henry III. (1257) we find Abbedik. In a Patent Roll for 1280 it is spelt Abbidike. In Nomina Villarum, taken from No. 6281 Harl. MSS., it is called the "Hundredum de Abedyk"; and in the Exchequer Lay Subsidies of the 1st of Edwd. III. we find "Hundred: de Abbediche" and Hundredum de Abbedik. From this I think we may conclude that round the possessions belonging to the Abbey of Muchelney a dyke or ditch was dug in very early times. A ditch is undoubtedly the most primitive form of boundary known. That it was customary for the monks thus to enclose their land is confirmed by one of the charters of Cleeve Abbey, printed in the Som. Arch. Proc. Vol. VI., pt. II., p. 54, where the following passage occurs:—"and from thence towards the north, by the ditch which the aforesaid monks have dug between that land and the land of Gerald," &c.

Traces of a large dyke or ditch remain between the parishes of Ilton and Broadway, the first-named was a manor of the Abbey of Athelney, and was situated in the Hundred of Abdick, whilst Broadway was in the old Hundred of Bulstone. Reverting to Ilminster, which is the only market town in the hundred, the whole parish belonging to Muchelney Abbey till the Dissolution, it is curious to find traces of a "dyke" between this parish and West Dowlish which is in the Hundred of South Petherton.

Ditton Street is really Dyke-ton St. meaning the street by the dyke or ditch.

That it is now difficult to trace this ditch is not to be wondered at when we recollect that by the Statute of Winchester, A.D. 1285, it was enacted that "highways leading from one market town to another shall be enlarged, and all bushes, woods or dykes, whereby a man may lurk to do hurt, abated."

That a ditch formed the boundary of the Hundred of Abdick on the south may be proved from other sources. It is not at all unlikely it formed a boundary between the Britons and the Saxons. It may even have marked the limits of the first or second Belgic invasion. To go fully into this matter is beside my present purpose, but I should like to refer to the evidence contained in the Codex Diplomaticus of Kemble. I am aware that many of the Saxon charters printed there are doubtful, if not spurious; but where there is no reason to doubt their genuineness, they are simply invaluable to the local historian. Some years ago I translated those which appeared to relate to this district. The following is an extract from the one numbered 381 as given by Kemble:—"First concerning the old ditch above Stibbe, thence continuing to the street, so on to the valley and the running brook and to the old town, southwards from there.....along the old ditch," et seq. Now Stibbe I identify with the modern Stibbear which is right on the boundary of the parish of Ilminster. If I am correct, the running brook would be the Ile, and the old town Ilminster. But in two other charters, of King Ine, No. 997, and Adelard, No. 1002, dated A.D. 701 and 737 respectively, the boundary given is far more definite and runs through Beallmeres Gate, Dunnes, Wytlege, Soe, &c. Bellmoor, Downs, Whitney, Sea, are all on the outskirts of Ilminster and Donyatt, and still mark the boundary of the hundred under consideration.

With regard to Bulstone, I can advance nothing so conclusive as to its derivation. An old form of the word is "Bolestone." It may refer to some Druidical monument long since swept away, being perhaps connected with the Phœnician god Bel; on the other hand it may be nothing more than the "bole" of a tree compounded with stone. A diligent search amongst the field names of parishes in this hundred may reveal its origin. It is certainly not now the name of any important place. In the Feet of Fines the Hundred Court of Bolestone occurs and was situated at Ilford Bridges. At that time the Hundred Court of Abdick was most likely held at Ilminster. The first time these Hundreds are found mentioned together is in an Inquisition p. m. of the 42nd Henry III.

72. MARNHULL TERRIER.—The following Terrier of the parish church of Marnhull has been forwarded to the Dorset Editor by the Right Rev. the Bishop of Southwark, and is now printed by his Lordship's permission.

The document is very complete and shows how carefully Archbishop Laud's Metropolitcal Visitation was conducted. Unfortunately an accident seems to have happened to the document a long time since, by which a portion of the parchment has perished and some of the writing been obliterated. The words in brackets, however, could be supplied without difficulty from the context, so that the words actually missing are but few.

73. PORTUS DE RADECLIVE—REDCLIFFE—RECKLY.—Wells MSS. R. i f 15. R. iii. f 266.

Under these names a locality is indicated which has nothing to do with Redcliffe in Bedminster, where the magnificent church of S. Mary Redcliffe rises on a cliff which once overlooked swamp and wood.

It denotes a different locality with a very different history. The western peak of the Mendip range, called Crook Peak, falls down on its southern side in a steep cliff of about 500 feet of limestone above, and red marl at foot, upon the moor, just where the Cheddar water forms a confluence with the Axe.

Here, about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Axbridge, is a hamlet of farmhouse and buildings, and two or three other houses, on the northern bank of the Cheddar water. It was marked in Greenwood's map (1821) as Ratley, in the late Ordnance map as Ripley; it has disappeared altogether from the latest Ordnance map, but it is known on the spot as Reckly or Rackly.

Here I believe was the Portus de Radeclive a 'hythe' where minerals from the Mendip mines, in old times, were shipped on barges and carried down the Axe to the port in the Channel, the ancient Portus ad Axium, under Breardown.

It is first mentioned in a charter of confirmation of the possessions of the See of Bath by Pope Alexander 3rd, A.D. 1179, to Bp. Reginald. R. iii. f 266.

.....Villam de Banewel et villam de Cumton cum portu de Radeclive et parte ville quam habes in Axebrugg ad Banewel pertinente cum omnibus pertinentiis et libertatibus suis.

It appears that the portus de Radeclive belonged to the parish of Cumton Episcopi, a member of the great manor of Banewel granted to the See by Cnut, and confirmed to Giso by William after the Norman Conquest, and that it was among the possessions of the See before Reginald's episcopate.

Ten years later, 1189, Bp. Reginald obtained a grant from Richard I. of all the lead mines on his lands in Somerset, and in the same charter he was allowed to make a borough and to have a market on his land of Radeclive.—R. i. f. 15.

“ Ricardus dei gratia &c.

Sciatis nos concessisse et presenti carta mea confirmasse Rainoldo Bathon. Episcopo et ejus successoribus in perpetuum, quod habeant mineram de plumbo ubicunque eam invenire potuit in terra sua de Sumerset, libere quiete et honorifice absque ulla conditione vel impedimento. Concedims eidem episcopo quod faciat burgum in terra sua de Radeclive, habendum et tenendum sibi et successoribus suis in perpetuum cum mercato et cum omnibus aliis consuetudinibus et libertatibus quod habet aliquod burgum in terra nostra de tota Anglia.

Hijs testibus Waltero Archiepiscopo Rotomagensi, Hugone Dunelm., Hugone Coventr. Episcopis—(et aliis).

Datum per manus Will. Eliensis electi cancellarii nostri apud Cantuar. vicesimo sexto die Novembris anno regis nostri primo.”

By inspection of the locality itself it can be seen how favourable a place this would be for the purpose of a ‘port’ or ‘hythe.’ It is the point where the Cheddar water comes nearest to the road from Axbridge, where the Cheddar water runs into the Axe, and forms a stream sufficiently broad for loaded barges to go down with an easy course to the mouth of the river. It lies under a bank of red marl, which, cropping out conspicuously above, accounts for the name of Redcliff.

It is probable therefore that so convenient a station was in use in Roman times for the same purpose, and that Reginald was reviving its use on becoming possessor of the old lead mines in Mendip. It is well known that the old Roman road from Sarum to the Bristol Channel traversed the Mendip highland by Charterhouse mines, Shipham, and Banwell to Uphill. There are traces of branch lines from these mines stretching down the south side of the Mendip to the level ground—in one direction by Shute shelve hill upon Cross,—in another by a depression in the Mendip further east than the present modern road through Cheddar Cliffs and entering Cheddar by a road bearing the name of Redcliffe Strete, which perhaps points to the ‘Port of Redcliffe’ as its original terminus. It would be easier to bring ore down from the mines by these roads to Portus de Radeclive and there to ship them to the Portus ad Axium, than to carry them all the way by road to the channel port.

In later times there is no further notice of this locality until 1372. Then there is a memorandum in the Wells Register R. i. f. 258 that the Dean and Chapter had given the Bishop (Harewell) £10 to help him in making a 'cut' in the river at Rade-clyve. This was probably just such a 'cut' to carry off the flood water into the Axe above the confluence, as exists now in the bank of the Cheddar stream below the farm house at Rackley.

'1372. Jan. 14—ordinatum fuit Stephano Pempel decano, Will. Camelprecentore, Johanne de Horsington Cancellario, (and 8 canons)— — decem libre sterlinge solvantur Episcopo in auxilium cujusdam cissure per eum apud Radeclive faciende—ita tamen quod de cetero non trahatur in consequentiam.'

Later in 1454 and again in 1534, the fisheries in the "great course of water called Radeclyffe Yoo" formed subjects of leases from the Dean and Chapter to the Vicars. These leases probably refer to the water of the Axe between Bidisham, (which was the property of the Dean and Chapter,) and the junction with the Cheddar water at Radeclive.

Charter 654 contains terms of a lease by Nicolas Carent Dean, and the Chapter of Wells, to John Pedwell, Vicar Choral, of the reversion of a grange and barton and fishery in Redclffe Yoo, in Bydesham and Redclyffemede for 50 years at a rent of 57/6 yearly.

Charter 753 is an agreement by Richard Wolman, Dean of Wells and the Vicars Choral, to abide by the arbitration of Walter Creting and Samuel Gilbert, Canons residentiary, as to the Grange and barton and the fishery of "a great course of water called Redeclyffe Yoo"—dated 1534, 25 Hen. 8.

Prebendary Coleman has supplied me with another notice from the accounts of the moor-wardens of the parish of Cheddar under the year 1634.

"Anno Domini 1633-4.

"John Venn, Richard Chesman, Moorwardens, theer charges are as ffolloweth

"Imprimis paid for mowing the river .. iiiil^b iiilⁱ iiij^d

"Item p^d John Bolting for bringinge up one of the hatches of the clyes whiche the water carried to Reckli xij^d

"Item p^d Richard Hardwich for hanging the same hatch in his place againe xj^d "

So the name of the Portus de Radeclive has been followed down through Redclyffe to Reckli, which corresponds with the present local name Reckley or Rackley. It is to be hoped that it may be saved from the oblivion into which the latest map of the Ordnance Survey tends to throw it.

78. METRICAL SCHOOL GRACE. (V. xxxv. 104).—Mr. W. George attributes the Grace to John Cennick, and mentions his appointment by John Wesley as a teacher in Kingswood Colliers' School, near Bristol.

According to Lysons' Environs of London, vol. ii, page 105, at his decease he appears to have been joined to the Moravian Brethren, was interred in their burial ground at Chelsea, and Lysons gives this extract from their Register:—

"John Cennick, M., departed July 4, 1755, was buried the 8th in Sharon."

and adds "he was the author of numerous sermons and hymns."
R.

79. BURIAL PLACE OF JOHN CLARKE, BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS.—Weever, in his Ancient Funeral Monuments, edition 1631, says he was buried in St. Botolph's, Aldgate, and gives this inscription:—

"Hic iacet Johannes Epis' Bathon & Wellensis, qui cum plures insignes Legationes . . . tandem obiit in Legatione Cleuensis Januar' M.ccccxl. cuius anime propitietur altissimus."

And adds—"This John Clerke, Doctor of Divinity and Master of the Rolls, was brought up in Cambridge, and consecrated to his Bishoprick, the year 1523. A man much employed in Ambassages. He died as before, and was first buried in the Minorities, being poisoned (as it was supposed) in Germany, when he went Ambassador to the Duke of Cleve, to render a reason of the King's divorce from the Lady Anne of Cleve, his sister."

A dangerous errand to be employed on, in the perilous reign of the eighth Henry. He appears to have been the forty-fourth Bishop, succeeding Cardinal Wolsey in the See on the 2nd May, 1523, and died 3rd Jan., 1540-1.

80. WYKE CHAMPFLOWER HERALDRY (VI. xliii. 52).—Mr. Bates has been very good in reading this; but there are a few remarks concerning it that I should like to supplement.

The Southworth pedigree in the Visitation of 1623 is not signed, so it well may be that "Pellsaut" instead of "Pelsett" is an error of the scribe, especially as the former in the Armory has an alias. No. II. 4. ought to read "Or a fess of lozenges gules each charged with an escallop of the 1st." Mr. Bates says "Pennington" without a ?, which Colby puts in for this coat; there is no Pennington like this, it being "Or five fusils in fess azure each charged with a cinquefoil argent," the true one being without the charges: the first coat without tinctures appears marshalled in the same order on the Gorges tomb at Salisbury, but is omitted on the Wraxall or adjoining shields. Mr. Schomberg says that the fusils on the Salisbury tomb vary from 4 to 5, and also (which is very valuable) that Symonds, in his diary, tricks it "Newmarch," which is "Or five fusils in fess gules on each an escallop of the field"; this is the true blazon of the shield and its family read by Mr. Bates. The marshalling would lead one to think the coat was connected with Oldehall, but it must be with Gorges, since Ralph Russell (see Weaver's Visitation, 72) married d. and h. of James Newmarch, but on page 50 he is called Rog. Russell: (Gloucester Visitation, 1623, Rad'us) in fact it is really the 3rd quarter in the Gorges coat. Again, No. II. 6. "Englowise" is so given in Papworth, but he, under Gad, says see Billet. The charges are Gads, and seem only to be carved correctly on the Salisbury tomb, where they are shaped like a breastplate, and where they are "caters on the dice," (Collinson III. 159) though at Chelvey Court (see S. & D. N. & Q., Vol. III., 279), the chevron and gads are ermines, but there cinq's: so the true reading of this coat seems to be "Argent a chevron between three gads ermines."

Mr. Bates has done good service to Collinson's heraldry in deciphering the Loyd coat; to make it a little more perfect, the eagle ought to be beaked gules, and the lion counterchanged armed and langued gules; No. 2 is not reversed, but as in Collinson I. 220.

As regards Collinson's 2, "Chequy or and argent a fess ermine," the question is what other coat is it marshalled with;—if with Fitz James then their marriage with the Turbeviles of Dorset brings in a different coat. but if with No. 4 "Berkerolles" then it would be the Turbervilles of Glamorgan, who bore both "Chequy or and azure, and or and gules a fess ermine." Perhaps Mr. Bates would kindly denote their positions. Collinson gives the Ducke coat quite right, so it must have suffered since his time.

Collinson gives another coat not mentioned by Mr. Bates. Quarterly 1 and 4; Azure three fleurs de lis or; 2 and 3 Gules two lions passant gardant or. There should probably be three instead of two in the last, the Royal Arms.

81. AN EFFIGY OF OAK IN CHEW MAGNA CHURCH.—In the popular volume recently published Round Bath in twenty picturesque Rambles there appears on page 13, speaking of the St. Loes of Newton, this statement, "one of the family, Sir John St. Loe, was apparently a giant. His monument in Chew Magna church is of gigantic size, measuring 7 feet 4 inches in length and 2 feet 4 inches across the breast."

Now I have been for many years connected with Chew Magna and my grandfather was for 57 years vicar of Chew, dying in 1841. I well remember the figure in bog oak, lying with legs crossed on the sill of a window in the south wall of the nave, and I always understood that it was the effigy of Sir John Hautenville, commonly called Hawkfield; that there was in time of yore a chapel of ease to Chew in the Hamlet of Norton Hawkfield [this hamlet adjoins the distinct parish of Norton Malreward] and that this effigy was brought to Chew for safe keeping when the chapel was razed. I have also heard that in the vicariate of the Rev. A. Ommanny the Rev. R. Hautenville, then Rector of Walton in Gordano, had this effigy repainted or repaired. He probably would not have done this to an effigy of Sir John St. Loe. Can further evidence be adduced on this question? FRANCIS J. POYNTON.

82. THE 'CHRISTMAS PIECE.'—The present season reminds me of what was a familiar object in my boyhood at this time of year—The 'Christmas Piece.' Have the readers of S. & D. N. & Q. any similar recollections?

The 'Christmas Piece,' as it was called, was a Broadsheet, measuring about $20\frac{1}{2}$ ins. by $16\frac{3}{4}$ ins. (I take the dimensions from some specimens now before me) with a blank space in the midst round which was a border of rude engravings, still more rudely painted by hand in gaudy colours, representing a set of subjects from the Bible or a series of historical scenes derived from other sources. The story of Daniel was a favourite. The boys, who were the purchasers of these artistic productions, wrote upon the blank space within the illustrated border, a specimen of their calligraphic skill, which might take the form of the Lord's Prayer, the Apostles' Creed, or some other short composition. The signature of the writer was also added. The 'Christmas Piece' was then complete, and was carried about shortly before Christmas, from house to house, in the form of a roll, with a view to extract a pecuniary reward from the admiring householder to whom it was exhibited at that open-hearted season. I remember this happening in the forties and fifties at Salisbury. Others may remember the same elsewhere. The same 'Piece' often did duty in several seasons.

I have before me some (unused) specimens, which were given me a few years ago by the son of the late Mr. Penny, bookseller, Sherborne. They represent:—

1. Christ the Good Shepherd. "London, published by J. FAIRBURN, 110, Minories."
2. Balaam Blessing. The same imprint.
3. The Life of Joseph.
4. The Besieging of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. "London Publ. Octbr. 3, 1842 by J. FAIRBURN, Upper Holloway, and sold by J. B. FAIRBURN, 110 Minories."
5. The Ten Commandments. "Printed and sold by Dean & Munday, 35 Threadneedle Street."
6. The Crusaders. The Life of Richard the First.

7. The Life of King Henry the Eighth.

8. Queen Elizabeth.

The third and the last three bear no printer's or publisher's name.

The arrangement is similar in all these broadsheets, viz., a long hand-coloured woodcut stretches across the top of the sheet, and forms the most striking object in the 'Piece.' Six smaller engravings, also coloured, three on each side, form a right hand and left hand border; and the foot of the sheet is occupied with a long, more or less emblematic illustration, but on a much smaller scale than the head-piece.

The engravings are rude enough, and the colouring has only its brilliancy to recommend it. The head-piece of No. 3, representing the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, is violently anachronistic, as several banners of the besiegers bear the S. P. Q. R.

83. SOMERSET AND DORSET FOLK IN ESSEX.—The following notes are from the Proceedings of the Essex Archæological Society, Vol. VI. Pt. ii. 1897:—

Baddow Magna. Alex. Barqueley, D.D., died 25th July, 1551; to be buried where it shall please God. Bequest to poor of Owkey, Somerset. (17 Powell, P.C.C.)

Barking Abbey. Nuns, 1531. Agnes Horsey. Vide will of her father, John Horsey of Yatminster, Dorset, 1532 (16 Thower). She was living in 1543. Vide will of W. Horsey, Canon of Exeter (25 Spert).

In Vol. VII., page 42, occurs the following:

Layton. Phillipp van Wilder, gent. (will, 1552-3, 1 Tashe) and one of the King's Privy Chamber. Property here—Rockeholte—and in Dorset. To be buried in S. Olave, Hart St.

High Ongar. Joh. Courteys, will proved 11th April, 1471 (1 Wattys). He was instituted R. of Cattistock 31st Aug., 1465, Curate of Stanton Harcourt, and Preb. of Beaminster (Sarum) 24th March, 1466. He exchanged Cattistock for Ongar with Richard Lake. (Ibid. page 58).

J. CROSS.

84. DORSET DIALECT.—The very interesting "Outlines of Dorset Grammar" in the last Number (VI. xliii. 53) is comparatively full on the pronouns, but nothing is said of the form "ich" for the pronoun of the first person. In Longman's Magazine, Vol. XIII. (1889) p. 523, it is said to have survived in the boyhood of the writer who was a schoolboy at Poole; and he quotes a letter from Mr. Thomas Hardy, who says that "ich woll" still survives in north-west Dorset and Somerset. But, he adds, "it is dying rapidly. I know nobody now under seventy who speaks so, and those above it use the form only in their impulsive moments."

J. EARLE.

85. SIR JOHN SHUTE. (VI. xliii. 59.)—Risdon, page 192, says, ". . . Shute one of the Barrons of th' Exchequer." He is coupled with Sir Edmond Anderson, Chief Justice 1582-1605.

F. WERE.

86. FITZ IVA AND BEAUPRE.—Can anybody say whether these families were connected, since it would help to prove a quartering on the Stawell coat on Cothelstone House? Risdon, pages 204-5, mentions a Richard Fitz Iva de Lansels and a William, miles, ob. 1265, on the same page with Johannes de Beapre, Senescallus et vicecomes Cornubie.

F. WERE.

87. DEAUDON.—Collinson gives this name thus several times at I. 90. II. 494. III. 496. It is an error, it ought to be DEANDON, Deandon being a manor in the parish of Widecombe, Devon.

F. WERE.

88. JAMES ANDERTON, M.P. for Ilchester in the three Parliaments, 1701, 1701-2 and 1702-5. Information respecting him will oblige. He was probably descended from the Clayton branch of the Andertons of Lancashire.

W. D. PINK, Leigh, Lancashire.

89. VESTRY OF BATH ABBEY CHURCH.—I am unaware of the date of erection of the Vestry to the Abbey Church at Bath, but it appears as old as the rest of the building. A great peculiarity about it, however, is that—though a portion of the main building—it is situated in the neighbouring parish of St. James. May I ask if a similar occurrence be an altogether unusual circumstance.

G. S. HENNING, M.A.

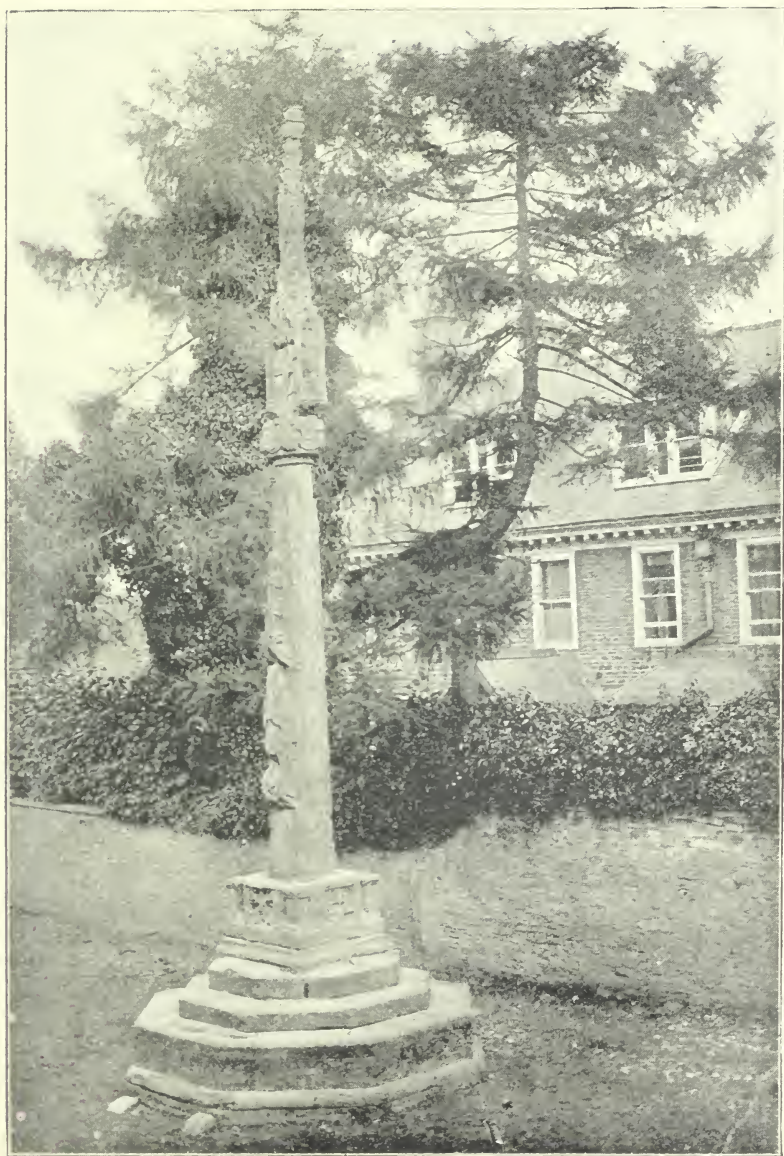

90. FRENCH PRIVATEER IN DORSET.—The unprotected condition of the southern coast of England during the last century, is well shown in the following extract from The London Chronicle of Feb. 12, 1757:—

"By Advice from Lime in Dorsetshire, we hear the beginning of last Month a French Privateer that had been hovering for some Time in and near that Bay, had the Insolence to send his Boat's Crew ashore, and took off several Sheep from an adjacent Meadow."

T. N. BRUSHFIELD, M.D.

91. WOLSTAN. (V. xxxviii. 189, 232, 233).—Another instance of this christian name on the borders of Dorset occurs in the will of Woulstan Foster of Mere, co. Wilts. Will proved 1586, in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, reference 69 Windsor.

THE STALBRIDGE CROSS.

92. STALBRIDGE CROSS.—This cross, one of the most perfect in the county, and in the best state of preservation, was without doubt a Market Cross, and erected in the 14th century by the Abbot of Sherborne, at that time "Lord of the town of Stalbridge." It stands near the centre of the main street, and is constructed of Hamhill stone, a material at that period much used—in the restoring of the Abbey of Sherborne, for instance.

It stands on a base of three octagonal steps. On the upper one of these there is a solid square block with a moulded plinth forming the base for the shaft, the corners being formed to represent small columns with indications that they formerly bore figures or small pinnacles. There are panels in the four sides of the block having sculptured figures in relief, which, though much defaced, appear to represent scenes relating to the Resurrection.

From thence springs the actual shaft of the cross which is formed of a solid block of Hamhill stone, about 12 feet in height and eighteen inches square at the bottom. On the west side is sculptured a standing figure, under a richly carved foliated canopy, with a Lamb at its feet, supported on a moulded bracket under which is an Angel's head, the corner of the shaft being sunk to form angle buttresses, terminated by small foliated attached pinnacles.

The shaft is surmounted by a cap bearing four shields, which retain traces of having had designs or heraldic bearings on them; these are supported by Angels facing from the four corners, the arms from each Angel interlacing under the shields.

Resting on the cap is an open shrine of rich tabernacle work, under the canopy of which, on the east side, is a representation of the Crucifixion with the usual figures of the Virgin and St. John on either side; on the west side, also under the canopy, is a cross supported by two figures, one of which has lately become defaced on the upper part.

The whole was originally crowned by a small crocketed spire, and perhaps a cross over all, but this last stage, having become decayed, was re-placed by a modern restoration, not in keeping with the original, about the year 1840, at which time the lower steps were also restored.

The height of the whole structure is about 30 ft.

S. L. PARSONS.

[We are much indebted to Mr. George Clarke, photographer, Stalbridge, for the excellent photograph from which the illustration of the Cross is taken.—THE EDITORS.]

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

93. THE TUTHILL FAMILY of Tharston, Norfolk County, England, and Southold, Suffolk County, New York, also written Totyl, Totehill, Tothill, Tuttle, etc., 1580-1757. By Lucy Dubois Akerly, Newburgh, N. Y. 1898. Pp. 12. Royal 8vo.

We have recently received this pamphlet, reprinted from the New York Genealogical and Biog. Record for July and October, 1898.

It contains a compendious sketch of the descendants of Henry Tuthill, baptised at Tharston, 28th June, 1612, the emigrant to America, and carried on to the year 1757. This part seems to be carefully traced out, but probably much more might be added to the account of the English ancestry. The authoress, Miss L. D. Akerly, resides at Newburgh, New York, and would no doubt be pleased to receive further information regarding the early fortunes of the family on this side of the water.

94. INDEX TO COLLINSON'S HISTORY OF SOMERSET, edited by the Rev. F. W. Weaver, M.A., and the Rev. E. H. Bates, M.A., including an Ordinary of all the Armorial Bearings by Lt.-Col. J. R. Bramble, F.S.A. 4to., 1898. Taunton, Barnicott & Pearce, price 15s.

95. GENERAL INDEX TO THE SOMERSETSHIRE ARCHÆOLOGICAL AND NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY'S PROCEEDINGS, volumes XXI.-XL. 8vo. Same date and publishers, price 5s. Compiled by F. T. E.

In a leading article in the Times on the International Conference on Scientific Literature, the author remarked that "writers on the methods of historical inquiry such as Langlois and Bernheim tell us that the question of the catalogue and the index is the question of the hour for the historian overwhelmed with documents." There was a time, not so very long ago, when the proper abode of an index-maker was an attic in Grub Street, and his work was considered to rank with the literary output of a German Professor. But we have ceased to laugh at German methods, and, rather late in the day, are trying to imitate them. It is not too much to say that just as the microscopic labours of Darwin and Russell have overthrown all earlier systems, so the methods of Round and Wylie are steadily undermining historical positions which have hitherto been supposed to defy criticism.

An Index is required for two different purposes. It may reveal the contents of a book which have as yet remained unknown, or it may focus in one combination the scattered labours of many writers. The two works at the head of this notice fulfil either requirement. The first makes known to the county of Somerset (for what country-house is without its Collinson, to be read in spare moments, as squire Osbaldistone did Gwillim while waiting for his dinner?) its only history.

The publication of the Index in the year when the County Archæological Society is celebrating its Jubilee, naturally tends to the inquiry how far additional material has been accumulated towards a new edition. The answer is partly given in the other work on our list. It supplies a key to the second series of the annual volumes of Proceedings*. In looking over the list of papers we may notice that the Natural History of the County is somewhat neglected in comparison with the Archæology. It is true that there are far more workers in this latter field, but may there not be another reason for paucity of results? Transfer to type the monumental inscriptions of an unrestored church, the arms in a painted window, or the contents of a mouldering parchment, and a piece of history is made safe for ever. Let out that you have seen a strange bird or a rare plant in the district, and you have gone the quickest way to ensuring its instant destruction from the face of the earth. No wonder observers of these things prefer to keep their discoveries dark.

The most effective way in which members of the Society and owners of Collinson can show their appreciation of the labours of the compilers is by depleting the stock of Indexes still on hand.

[Mr. A. S. Bicknell writes to point out that Collinson died at Bath, 27 Aug., 1793, and not at Bristol, 27 Sept., 1793, as the Editors (relying on Dict. Nat. Biog.) stated in their Preface. He was buried at Long Ashton.—EDITOR FOR SOMERSET.]

96. SOMERSET PARISH REGISTERS.—Marriages, Vol. I., edited by W. P. W. Phillimore, M.A., B.C.L., and D. Ll. Hayward, Vicar of Bruton. London: issued to the subscribers by Phillimore and Co., 36 Essex Street, Strand, 1898. Price 10/6. Only 150 printed.

Our feelings towards the Editors of this work are very like those of Andrew Fairservice towards Rob Roy "ower bad for blessing, and ower good for banning." At a small cost they have preserved for future generations the most valuable part of ten parish registers, but then they have sent forth the book without an index. These ten parishes are the first instalment of the Deanery of Ilchester, and as there are only seven remaining for the second volume now in the press, we earnestly plead for an index for which there will be plenty of space. With this exception the book is just what it should be, plain on the outside and readable within. In addition to the preface, there are notes on the condition of the registers prefixed to the entries for each parish. The earliest register is that of Kingsdon which preserves the original paper-book in marvellous preservation, dating as it does from 1540. At Northover, an adjacent parish and suburb of Ilchester, the earliest marriage entries are said to belong to 1531, but as there is a continuous hiatus from this date to 1542, it is most probably a slip for 1541. Undoubtedly there are a few registers earlier than 1536, but as a rule these abnormally early dates should be treated with suspicion. Four other parishes start their books temp. Elizabeth, one in the seventeenth century, and the remaining three early in the last. At High Ham it is noted that the Marriage Register 1754-1812 is not to be found. This may be due to the fact that the same covers often held the Banns as well as the Marriages; then, when the marriage portion was superseded in 1812, the banns forms were still used, and the book, being looked upon with less respect, was kept in the church or the clerk's house and somehow disappeared. We have no space left for notes genealogical or nominalistic, but Sampson Belteshazzar al's. Boleshor is too delightful to be omitted; and the surname of Burcy at High-Ham in the sixteenth century seems a memory of Serlo de Burci, its feudal lord 1086. A.

97. THE WEDMORE CHRONICLE, Vol. II. No. 6, October, 1898. Edited by Rev. S. H. A. Hervey. W. Pople, Wedmore, price 6d.

We regret to say that this will be the last number of this interesting work, as the Editor has resigned the living of Wedmore. The table of contents includes:—

Wedmore Ratepayers from 1701 to 1783.

Wedmore Vestry Meetings 1728 to 1850.

Memoir of Lord Arthur Hervey, Bishop of Bath and Wells. The Stone Family.

The illustrations include a plan of the Church, an excellent likeness of Lord Arthur Hervey and nine pictures of the church.

The memoir of the late Bishop of Bath and Wells is particularly interesting and should insure for this number of the Chronicle a ready sale. We hope that the Editor will have health and strength to continue his valuable literary work for many years to come.

ELIZABETH. MARY.

THE POWLETT BRASS. NINETY CHURCH, WILTS.

FIGURED QUARRELS—WEST WINDOW,— MINETY CHURCH.

100. THE POWLETT BRASS, MINETY CHURCH, WILTS.—A few miles north of Swindon is the parish of Minety, and in its Church, among many features of interest, is one specially relating to the county of Somerset, the brass of Nicholas Powlett, who was presumably a member of the principal descent of that family at Hinton St. George.

Aubrey—the Wiltshire Leland—in his description of the church taken A.D. 1659-70, relates:—

"In a south window of three columnes (lights) in the top are these two es-cutcheons, the first by the name of Chiche, the second by the name of Clay. Minety Court in this parish was the mansion of the Lord of the Mannour, or some great person: the seat in the church belonging to the house is under the windowe in which these two coates are, and therefore not unlikely they were coates of some of the possessors of the Court aforesaid. In the limb;—"Orate pro a'iabus de - - - generosi et Alicie"--- In the third column " - - - ac toferi - - - Joh'is - - - Dorothee - - - Isabelle - - - qu - - - hanc fenestram - - -"

Over this inscription in the window is the effigies of a knight armed cap-à-pi, with his mandilion or surcoat, on which his coat of armes; (Hungerford, with a mullet for difference,) with the effigies of his three sonnes, and three daughters. They are in purple gowns. First daughter in a cap argent, semée guttée de poix; second a kind of French hood; third haire dishevelled, temples bound round with pearls. Over the three sonnes and three daughters' heads in a scroll, "That we may long."—"Laudate pueri." These, in this and the next windowe, are the pictures of the benefactors and their children kneeling, in the habitts of those dayes bidding their beades.

The next windowe, three columnes, one is semée horseshoes or. The other semée fetters or; a terrett of a greyhound's collar. Another semée escallops or; besides M and R for the Blessed Virgin.

In a north windowe,—"Orate pro a'iabus Thome Hungerford militis et Dame Cristian uxoris ejus qui - - -." This coate in several places of the windowe (Powlett impaling Hungerford, with a mullet for difference) underneath is a little brass inscription of Nicholas Powlett, and Mary his wife who was a Hungerford."

Of this glass only a few fragments remain, but there is little doubt the group originally represented Sir Thomas Hungerford, of Down-Ampney, ob: Oct., 1494, his wife Christian Halle and their six children. Sir Thomas was the son of Sir Edmund of Down-Ampney, ob: 1485, who was the third son of Walter, the first Lord Hungerford, K.G., ob: 1449, by his wife Katherine Peverell.

Christian Halle was the daughter of John Halle of "The Halle," Salisbury, an eminent merchant and woolstapler of that city, whose fine mediæval residence still remains there; and within it, as also at Down-Ampney, are found the arms of Hungerford with mullet for difference, impaling the coat of Halle, —Argent, a chevron sable, charged with an estoile of six points or, between three columbine flowers azure, leaved and stalked vert.

The brass of Nicholas Powlett occurs on the north wall of the chantry, at the east end of the north aisle, which is enclosed from the body of the church by oak screens of carved tracery. Canon Jackson says this was a chantry "used" by the Hungerfords, which was probably the case, but its origin may be ascribed to the Claye family, as on the corbels that support its roof, are shields that bear their arms,—(Argent,) a chevron engrailed, between three trefoils slipped (sable,) as previously observed by Aubrey in the windows. The Claye family appear to have belonged to the parish of Chrich in Derbyshire, where they held an influential position, and in the church there (in 1750) were several monuments to them, one with incised effigies and arms, and punning inscriptions on their name, which from their quaintness deserve quotation. On a tomb to several members of the family dated 1583-1603-32, is,— “ Heere lieth John Clay gentleman, and Mary whom he first did wive,

With her he lived near eight years space, in which God gave them children five.
Daughter to William Calton, esquir, who was unto that Kynge of fame
Henrie the eight, chief cock-matcher, and servante of his hawkes by name.
And as she had a former match, Charnell of Swarston in Lestershire,
So she deceast, this Clay did take the widow of German Poole, esquire, Daughter of Edward, who was son to Sir John Ferrers of Tamworth, knight.
Shee is entombed in this church with him to whom she first was plight,
And now this Claye is closed in claye, the fairest flesh doth fade like grass,
He had on sister who unto Stuffyn of Shirbrook married was.
For death doth give an end to all, and now this Clay shall reste herein,
All Claye to claye shall com at last by deathe, the due reward of synne,
Thou deathe, his deathe, thy deathe is he whose soule doth live with Criste for aye,
The stinge of death can no one flee, the greatest monarchs are but claye.”

and over the tomb,—

“ Soules they are made of heavenly spirit ;
From whence they come ye heavens inherite.
But know that bodies made of Claye :
Death will devoure by night or daye,
Yett is he as hee was I saye :
He living and dead remaineth Claye.
His very name that nature gave :
Is now as shalbe in his grave.
Tymes doth teache, experience tryes :
That claye to duste the winde up-dryes.
Then this a wonder counpte wee must :
That want of winde should make Claye dust.” *

The foundation of the chantry points to a date antecedent to the inscriptions ; and it was erected, probably by a person resident and holding possessions in the neighbourhood—it may be Minety Court,—as suggested by Aubrey.

Nicholas Powlett and his wife Mary Hungerford appear kneeling in prayer, and facing each other, with their children behind them, treated in the conventional style adopted at this era, that of late in the sixteenth century. He is in full armour with sword and misericorde, above his head “NICOLAS POWLETT,” behind him kneels his son in academic gown, and over him “AMES POWLETT.” His wife in rich costume, above her “MARY POWLETT,” behind her kneel her three daughters named respectively “ELIZABETH,”—“MARY,”—“EDIGHT.”

* Coll. Top. et Geneal : Vol. I., page 46-9.

Above them are some interesting armories illustrative of their descent. Over Nicholas is,—1. On a wreath, an embowed arm in armour, the hand glaived, grasping a sword, on the arm a crescent for difference,—being the crest of Powlett, and cadency for a second son;—2. a shield charged with, three swords in pile, (POWLETT)—3.—A hand with wrist ruffled grasping a sword erect, across the blade a label with the motto “GARDEZ LA FOI”—also for Powlett. Above the lady are, 1. Out of an Earl's coronet, a wheat-sheaf, supported by two sickles, being the crest of Hungerford,—2. A shield thereon, Two bars, in chief three roundels, a crescent for difference, (HUNGERFORD). 3. Three sickles in triangle, enclosing a mullet for difference, badge of Hungerford, with cadency for a third son. Below the shield is this inscription.—“OF SVFFERANCE COMES EASE.” There is no further inscription, or date.

With little doubt the brass may be assigned to Nicholas Powlett the second son of Sir Hugh Poulett of Hinton St. George, Sheriff of the county 29 and 34 Henry VIII, 1538-43, and 1 Edward VI, 1547, who married, first, Elizabeth daughter of Walter Blount with no issue, and secondly, Philippa, daughter of Sir Lewis Pollard,* by whom he had three sons and one daughter, and according to Collinson was buried in Hinton St. George church, where there is his effigy in armour with that of his wife, and this inscription, “Hic jacet Hugo Powlet miles, qui obiit 6 die Decembris, Anno D'ni - - -.” The eldest son of Sir Hugh was the well-known Sir Amias Poulet, ob: 1588, gaoler of the unfortunate Mary Queen of Scots, and Nicholas appears to have named his son after his uncle Sir Amias.

Mary Hungerford, the wife of Nicholas Powlett (according to Canon Jackson) was the daughter of Thomas Hungerford of The Lea, near Malmesbury, by Edith Strange his wife, and he was great-grandson of Sir Thos. Hungerford and Christian Halle before referred to. Of their three daughters, Elizabeth married Henry Long, of Ashley, near Box.

The Stranges were of Somerford-Keynes, and in the north aisle of the church is a fine monument with this inscription:—

Pie Lector;—Dormientem hic habes Robertum Straung Filium unigenitum et Posthumum Roberti Straung de Somerford-Keynes in Agro Wilts Armigeri et Janæ uxoris, filiæ Anthonij Hungerford de Black-Bourton in agro Oxon. Militis. Qui e quinque Sororibus tres habuit superstites; Quæ (concurrentibus maritis) fragile hoc erexerunt Monumentum in Fratris sui memoriam: qui e vivis decessit 14o die Junii An'o D'ni 1654. Ætatis suæ 23.

Ὁν φιλεῖ Θεὸς ἀποθνήσκει νέος
(He whom God loves dies young.)

Non jacet hic Straung attamen hic jacet ille Robertus Qui modo Straung fuerat, Straung abit, ille manet.

* A Justice of the Common Pleas, of Gorleston, and King's-Nympton in North Devon, and who is said to have had twenty-seven children by his two wives, eleven sons and sixteen daughters.

Arms,—Quarterly,—Two lions passant, debruised by a bend ermine, (STRANGE) and Hungerford.

With regard to the figured quarrels observed by Aubrey, a few are still found in the west window, the columbine, escallop, chain-fetter, primrose-plant (?) and letters R. and A. R., &c.

The chain-fetter, is probably a badge of Percy. Sir Thomas Hungerford of Farleigh, executed at Salisbury in 1469, married as his first wife, Anne, daughter of Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland. The columbine of Lady Christian (Halle) widow of Sir Thomas Hungerford, of Sudington-Langley, Worcestershire; by her will dated July, 1504, she desires to be buried in "Monasterio D'næ de Circestre." Sir John Hungerford, her eldest son, will dated 24 July, 1524, desires "to be buried in the Abbey Church of Cirencester"; as also his wife, the Lady Margaret, will 6 April, 1527, "to be buried in the Chapel of Our Lady in the Abbey Church of Cirencester, where my husband Sir John is buried." Where Sir Thomas the husband of Christian Halle was buried, does not appear.

101. LANGPORT CHURCH HERALDRY.—In the interests of Collinson's heraldry I write this, hoping some kind friend will read the coats which I personally have not been able to do. In Somerset Archaeological Proceedings, Vol. XL., ii, 75, Mr. Weaver says, according to Collinson III, 153 (really 133), the Heyron arms are.... Now Collinson does not say they are the Herne or Heron arms, but that "in all of the three windows of what is called their chapel are," in fact how could he? seeing that in his 2nd vol., 290, he says "three herons."—"Per fesse argent and sable a pale counterchanged three herons of the first"; the first, this makes the coat false; if the second Papworth, says Storey. Mr. Buckle's note on the same page is also no guide, as it is too wide; if he had said 'Party per pale and per fess,' or 'Paly of 3 per fess counterchanged,' and given the tinctures of the heads, well and good, but counterchanged has no meaning. Now both Mr. Buckle and Mr. Paul read the charges as being heron's heads not birds; therefore unless Collinson misread, which is likely seeing his reading is false, it is not the same coat that he saw if they were all alike; it is sad if this is the only one left out of the number. Mr. Paul, XL. ii. 67, alters the tinctures to Per fess sable and argent, a pale counterchanged three herons' heads of the second and calls the arms Rosse; both Armory and Papworth say they ought to be Eagles' heads—at any rate a different coat to Collinson's, if read partially right. The three things to guide the reader to a true reading are, 1st, the dexter chief tincture, 2nd, the tincture of the heads, if so, not birds, and 3rd, the heads of what bird; the rest will follow naturally.

No mention is made in the Proceedings of the Coat Collinson says is in the east window of the North Chapel, viz. 'Argent a fesse nebuleé gules, surmounted by a bend or,'—this is poor heraldry—impaling 'Argent a chevron gules between three acorns or,'—this is false,—the acorns would most probably be vert: I hope this may still be read among the debris.

102. MILTON-CLEVEDON—CHANCERY SUIT.—The chapel of St. Laurence referred to in the following Chancery suit was first re-discovered by Bishop Hobhouse who found that it was mentioned in the Bruton Cartulary and at the time (1883) kindly acquainted me with the fact. I then turned to the tithe map of the parish and found that two contiguous fields were called Chapel Bush; through one of these fields runs the footpath leading from the signpost on Creech Hill to Greenscombe Farm: both the fields called Chapel Bush are bounded on one side by the high road. No. 119 in the Bruton Cartulary (S.R.S. viii. 28) is a

"Grant by John de Clivedon and Agatha his wife and Mathew their son and heir for the good of their souls and their parents' to the chapel of St. Lawrence in the parish of Middleton of 4 acres in one year and $3\frac{1}{2}$ acres in another year two of which acres are next the said chapel towards the east in Rigarstone, and a fourth by the cross towards Henngrove. They also grant the run of one horse, two oxen, and two cows in their fenced land, besides the use of the common pasture. Testibus Radulfo de Clivedon, Adam Walensi, H. Bastard, Adam de Henngrove."

Henngrove is now improperly called Henley Grove, but the old inhabitants always spoke of it by its true name: I have heard them so call it, they are nearly all dead now.

Rigarstone is, I believe, a plot of ground called Rivard: it is a deep ravine, and is entered by a gate close to the above named signpost. It was open common but was fenced about 20 years ago.

I have fixed upon a site which I believe was that of the chapel, but have not been able at present to make any investigation by digging. It seems from the following suit almost as if the chapel (perhaps in ruins) was standing as late as 33 Hen. VIII.

The Milton-Clevedon Register begins in 1595 and contains entries relating to the names of Green, Tudgey, Orpit, Stint, Coles, Pippet, Jordan, Townsend, and Court.

The Greens were a well known family; their pedigree will be found in the 1623 Visitation of Somerset (Harl. Soc. xi. 43).

104. MANOR OF CROSCOMBE.—This manor was a member of the great manor of Shepton Malet, vested in Glaston Abbey temp. Will. I.

In 12th cent. this manor was held by Elias Cotele of Camerton under Hugh Poinz, the Sub-tenant of the Abbey.

The Paltons of Paulton inherited from the Coteles.

The last Palton (Sir Wm.) died in 1449, having founded a chantry in Croscombe Church. His widow (Anne Courtney of Powderham) married Richard Denzill or Denshill of Weare Gifford, Devon (son of another Richard Denzill of the same).

Elizabeth, d. and h. of Richard Denzill, married in 1454 Martin Fortescue, who died 1472 (son of Lord Chancellor Fortescue under Hen. VI., who by his 3rd wife, heir of John Jamys of Philips Norton, had some land in Somerset) and had a son John, b. 1460, d. 1503, who by his wife,—St. Leger, had a son Bartholomew, the father (by Ellen Alson his wife) of Hugh Fortescue, d. 1600, the husband of—Chichester. Elizabeth (Denzill), on the death of Martin Fortescue, remarried Sir Richard Pomeroy. (History of Fortescue Family, by Lord Clermont, p. 126.) H.

105. SOMERSET REGISTERED ESTATES IN 1717.—From the "Forfeited Estates Papers" at the Public Record Office, I have extracted the following names of those who suffered for their adherence to the cause of James Stuart in the early days of our first Hanoverian King.

The papers contain detailed particulars of each owner's property, the names of the tenants or occupiers, with the annual value of and the charges, if any, upon the estate. The returns were made in pursuance of 1 George I., stat. 2, c. 55, 'for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales' and failure to register entailed a forfeiture to the Crown.

106. GREENOAR IN THE PARISH OF CHEWTON MENDIP, SOMERSET.—

“Great disputes arose between the tenants at Chewton and the prior of Greenoar cell upon Mendip within this parish. It was a cell to Glastonbury Abbey, now an extra parochial farm betwixt Chewton and Priddy.” Collinson, II. 116.

The question has been raised as to whether the Priory of Greenoar was a cell of Glastonbury at all. Bishop Hobhouse says (replying to a letter on the subject) that he has never (in spite of much search) found Greenoar in any record of Glastonbury possessions, whereas it is found in all records relating to Hinton Charterhouse. It was originally part of Chewton parish and manor and continued to pay a composition for tithe to the Rector of Chewton, and a quit rent to the Mancrial Lords of Chewton.

107. DORSET KEMPS.—A Martin Kemp, merchant of Poole, died in 1772 at Poole. He is reputed to belong to the Kemps who figure in the Long Parliament as M.P.s for Lymington and Christchurch (Hants) &c. Mr. Martin Kemp's father must have died about 1722. To which branch of the Kemp family did he belong? The Kemps of Hants, Sussex and the Isle of Wight have an earlier common origin. Is this true of the Dorset family also?

GEO. BROWNE, 38 Gloucester Place, Boscombe, Hants.

108. STANDERWICK FAMILY.—In the British Museum copy of Hutchins' History of Dorset is the following entry in the Index—“Standerwick, John, twice Mayor of Lyme, Epitaph I. 406.”

It (the Epitaph) is certainly not in the place indicated. Can any of your readers give me the correct reference?

JOHN W. STANDERWICK.

110. PLOX.—At Bruton, Somerset, there is a "quartier" called Plox, in which is a house called Plox House. In the Western Gazette for March 3, 1899, I find among the deaths, that of a person, "at The Plocks," Blandford. Any suggestion as to the meaning and derivation will be welcome.

113. THE PELLY PORTRAIT OF ADMIRAL BLAKE.—Can any of your readers tell me the address of Mr. Raymond Pelly who exhibited this portrait at the "Historical Portrait Exhibition" some years ago? I shall also be glad of any information with regard to the connection between this portrait, and that in the possession of Capt. John Blake of Watcombe, Hants, from which the "Ames" engraving was taken.

114. THOMAS HANCOCK.—In Hutchins' Dorset, 3rd. Ed., page 603, Thomas Hancock is given as Vicar of Milborne St. Andrew, A.D. 1563-9. Is anything further known of this clergyman? Is he the noted west country reformer noticed by Strype, and whose (partial) autobiography is among the Fox MSS. published by the Camden Society in 1860?

GEORGE BROWNEN, 38 Gloucester Place, Boscombe, Hants.

115. BRYMORE.—When the Somerset Archæological Society visited Brymore, the residence of Mr. H. H. Pleydell Bouverie, in 1897, I read two shields carved over his porch; one was Pym and Trivet quarterly, which the December number of the Genealogical Magazine proves ought to have been Pym, impaling Trivet and Fareway quarterly. The other shield would make a capital book plate, since it has the Pym coat small in the sinister base, with a large helmet, torse, and crest more in profile than in the Magazine, this being (not given in the Armory) "A griffin's head couped azure, langued gules, between two wings argent:" in fact a demi-griffin without the tail: the Magazine blazon leaves out the torse, which would be, I should think, argent and sable. The sculptor could not have known that the Trivet was a quarterly coat.

116. PSEUDO-GILDING ON BRONZE.—Can any of your readers solve a problem left open by Sir J. Evans? Speaking of a bronze dagger found at Woodyates by Sir R. C. Hoare, he says:—"This blade, like many others, is described as having been gilt, but this can hardly have been the case. Dr. Thurnam has tested such brilliantly polished surfaces for gold, but found no traces of that metal." In the Dorset Museum there is a very fine dagger, bronze apparently, but of an unusual copper-colour. Near the point there is what looks wonderfully like remains of gilding. Now, submissively accepting Sir John's dictum, the question is "What is the nature of this close imitation of gilding?" Some bronze coins of Constantine I., in the Dorset Museum have a slight appearance of having been gilt. This by some is set down to a chemical action caused by elements in the soil in which they lay—peat soil was suggested, it is believed. But this is not satisfactory. In the first place the gilt look on the coins bears no comparison whatever with that on the dagger. But, supposing for the moment the coins and the dagger to be coated by the same chemical action, what is the exact nature of that action, and what is the scientific name of the metallic coating? A friend, a chemical expert, seems to recognize iron pyrites as the only compound able to "simulate gold." And he says that this sulphide of iron may (if he is rightly understood) be accounted for by the small trace of iron which he holds to exist in the complicated metal called bronze, combining with sulphur which exists almost everywhere. But he has not verified this by experiment as yet, as relates to the dagger with the apparent gilding. Can any S. & D. N. & Q. reader answer the above questions?

117. LAVINIA SMITH.—I am anxious to discover the origin of the rather uncommon name of Lavinia which I find in Somersetshire families of ancestors,—Smith of Canonsleigh and St. Audries, or Dyke of Pixton and Dulverton. I find that in 1729 my ancestor James Smith married Grace daughter of Edward Dyke of Pixton, and Elizabeth daughter of Richard Blackford of Dunster, Master in Chancery.

James Smith named two of his daughters Lavinia, the first one died in infancy, but the second married afterwards a Mr. Fellowes, ancestor of Lord de Ramsey. I feel pretty sure that the origin of this pretty name is to be found either in the Dyke or the Blackford families and it may possibly enlighten me as to one or more intermarriages.

* Ancient Bronze Implements, edition i, page 236.

I shall feel obliged to any one who will communicate with me on this subject.

DOMINICK BROWNE, Christchurch, New Zealand, Dec., 1898.

118. SYMONDSBURY RECTORY, DORSET, AND BISHOPS GLEMHAM AND GULSTON.—This rectory is described by Hutchins "as the best living in the County, being near £500 per annum, with a noble glebe, and the present rectorial house a very handsome one," from whom we also glean the following further particulars as to two of its distinguished rectors.

Prior to 1631 the patron was Lady Beauchamp, and in that year she presented Henry Glemham, B.D. He was the younger son of Sir Henry Glemham, Knt., of Glemham, Suffolk, admitted a Commoner of Trinity College, Oxford, 1619. He was stripped of all his preferments in the Civil War. At the Restoration he was made Dean of Bristol, and in 1666, Bishop of St. Asaph, with which See he also held this rectory in commendam. He died 17 Jan., 1669, at Glemham Hall and was buried in the family vault at Little Glemham, near Saxmundham, Suffolk.

He was succeeded by William Gulston, S.T.P., who was inducted 22 April, 1669. He was a native of Leicestershire, and admitted of St. John's College, Cambridge. He purchased the patronage of the rectory of Symondsbury in perpetuity of Lady Beauchamp, and when he was advanced to the See of Bristol in 1678, he then "gave intimations of an intention to annex this rich living to the Bishopric, but forgot his engagements afterwards, and like his predecessor held it in commendam with the See."

He died 4 April, 1684, and was buried in the chancel of Symondsbury Church.

120. BURIAL PLACE OF WILLIAM PIERSE, BISHOP OF BATH AND WELLS.—In Lysons' Environs of London, Vol. 1, page 711, is the following extract from the Register of Walthamstow, Essex:—

"May 19, 1670, -then was buried the Right Revd. Father in God, William Ld. Bishop of Bath and Wells, the oldest Bishop in Christendom, either in respect of age, or else of consecration, being 94 years old."

Lysons adds, "Bishop Pierse, having been Canon of Christ's Church in Oxford, was made Bishop of Peterborough in 1630, and translated to Bath and Wells in 1632. He was a zealous loyalist during the civil war, and suffered much persecution. In the latter part of his life he resided at Walthamstow,"—and he gives this inscription as being found on his gravestone in the church.

"Hic jacet R. Præsul Gul. Pierse qui a sede Petriburgensi ad Bathoniensem & Wellensem translatus fuit anno Carol. I. 80.^a quâ temporum iniquitate proturbatus fuit usque ad reditum Caroli Secundi; restitutus templum cathedrale Wellense reparavit; episcopale palatium exædicavit; cœlis maturus terris valedixit, anno ætat. 94.—Salut. 1670."

His episcopate seems to have extended over forty years. He was the fifty-sixth Bishop of Bath and Wells, and was translated to that Diocese 30 Nov., 1632. R.

123. DORSET MEN'S GRAVES ABROAD.—Some of your correspondents have been noting inscriptions to Dorset men buried away from their County. A few years ago, strolling across the old disused grave-yard on the esplanade at Batticolow, on the east coast of Ceylon, I came across a modest grave-stone over the grave of one Fudge, described as a native of Dorset, and servant to one of the earliest British Governors. Fudge is a name well-known in West Dorset, and at Lyme Regis. C.

124. COMPTON MARTIN.—When the Church was repaired in 1858, underneath the floor of that part of the building appropriated to the Moreton Parishioners was discovered a slab of stone, upon which was sculptured the figure of a man habited in the costume of a civilian, but holding a short sword at his side. Upon the tomb was inscribed

Thos. de Mortone.

Some 25 years later a controversy arose about this monument and a learned antiquary assigned it without any authority whatever to a member of a family of a different name who formerly held possessions in this parish. I therefore wish to record the fact that I saw the monument soon after the discovery and copied the inscription then and there. I forget when the monument was removed to its present situation. The colouring was then or afterwards made by the wife of the Rector, but have no recollection of any colour being upon the figure when discovered.

The De Mortones were lords of the Manor of Moreton in the time of Edward II.

125. "THE CHRISTMAS PIECE." (IV. xliv, 82.)—My recollection of these broadsheets goes back to 1830-1831. I remember writing two when about 9 years of age. One was, I think, the story of Daniel as mentioned by Mr. Mayo; the other was that of the disobedient Prophet, which is very distinct in my mind because it gave me a great deal of trouble in writing the words exactly as they occur in 1 Kings, xiii, 28. We had to take our "Pieces" home to show our progress in writing, but I was not aware that they were taken round to get rewards from friends.

JOHN SHORT.

126. AN EFFIGY OF OAK IN CHEW MAGNA CHURCH. (VI. xliv. 81.)—The effigy in this Church, described in a work, Round Bath in 20 Picturesque Rambles, as being that of Sir John St. Loe, is the sculptured stone figure in the Strachey Chapel.

The Bog Oak effigy of Sir John Hautville has the legs crossed, and was brought from Norton Hautville Church when that building was destroyed many years ago. I remember that 50 years ago it stood in the sill of the window in the Baber Chapel in Chew Church, and there it remained until 1860, when the screen was re-decorated and the effigy placed in the south aisle under a canopy then erected to receive it.

The late Vicar, the Rev. E. A. Ommanney, had the figure repainted without any regard to the original work. I never heard that any person besides the late Vicar had anything to do with this act of vandalism, and as I was living at Chew and took much interest in the work although disapproving of the Vicar's treatment of the figure, I think I must certainly have known if this had been the case. I have a water colour drawing of the effigy taken before the repainting.

WILLIAM ADLAM, F.S.A.

[Mr. Were also writes on this subject, and refers to Collinson, II, 108, where an account of the removal of the monument is narrated.]

127. EDMUND ANSTY OF SOUTH PETHERTON.—Quarterly Review, A.D. 1823, p. 458. Article on 'Superstition and Knowledge.' "That the 'Phantasmagoria' was really applied for such purposes is satisfactorily evinced by one of the 'relations' in Richard Bovet's Pandemonium or the Devil's Cloisters, a work inscribed by the learned author to Dr. Henry Moore in a dedication which vouches for the veracity of all the particulars in this collection. Bovet published his book in 1684 and it appears that about 60 years before Mr. Edmund Ansty of South Petherton had occasion to return home by night from Woodbury Hill Fair, a mart well known in the West Country. Coming to a place not far from Yeovil noted by the name of Outhedge his horse rushed very violently with him against one side of the bank, snorting and trembling very much, so that he cd by no means put him on his way, but he still pressed nearer to the bushes. At length Mr. Ansty heard the hedges crack with a dismal noise and perceived coming towards him in the road which is there pretty wide a large circle of duskish light about the bigness of a very large wheel and in it he perfectly saw the proportion of a huge bear as clearly as if it had been by daylight. (The italics are not ours they are Bovet's and mark his horror). The spectre passed near him and as it came just over against the place where he was the monster looked very gushfully at him showing a pair of very large flaming eyes. As soon as ever it was gone by, his horse sprung into the road and made homeward with so much haste that he c^d not possibly rein him in and had much ado to keep the saddle. There are many of the neighbours can witness the truth of it! Yea and it also witnesses that about the year 1620 some mischievous English Scholar was well acquainted with the construction of the magic lantern."

Blake, and 5/- by said A. Question, hath sold to said A. Question and his heirs 68½ acres of land in Puriton and Bawdripp, parcel of the Manor of Crandon-cum-Puriton, demised for 40 years by Robert Blake of Bridgewater, Esq., to said Nicholas Blake, 13th April, 1649; and 33 acres in the same parishes and manor, demised by said Robert Blake for 40 years to Robert Bowdich, at the same date — to hold the premises to the said A. 129. CHICHESTER FAMILY.—From whom were the Chichesters of Virginia derived? William Chichester had a grant of 200 acres in Lower Norfolk, Va., for five persons, 14th Sept., 1664. Richard Chichester bought lands in Va., 1702, and came there with his son John. His will, dated 14th Sept., and proved 12th June, 1734, names his nephew and godson, Chichester Chinn; Priscilla Reeves, dr. of Annie Palmer, deceased, to whom he gives a trunk marked A.C.; and his cousin Thomas Ware. "She [Priscilla] is to be heard of at Mr. Ware's house at Dunnex Hill, Lillisden in the parish of North Curry, 4 miles out of Trenton [? Taunton] Somersetshire, or at Silverton, 5 miles out of the City of Exton."

John Chichester (son of Richard) married Elizabeth Symes (d. Jany, 1728) dr. of Mary Symes, widow, of Dorset, England. The will of Mary Symes, now of Beaminster, late of Powstock in the co. of Dorset, widow. (272 Brodrepp) mentions her dr. Elizabeth Chichester, and grandson Richard Chichester in Virginia; Elizabeth Beer, widow and relict of Francis Beer, late of Long Bredy, Dorset; and uncle George Richards, son of Chilcott Symes and dr. Mary.

Richard Chichester, son of John, of Va., died at Exeter, England, 30th Dec., 1743, and was buried at Powerstock, Dorset, 3rd Jany., 1744.

Are these persons descended from Philip Chichester of Melbury Osmond, Dorset (Visit. of Dorset, 1623) son of Amias Chichester of Arlington. Devon;—or if not, then from what other branch of the family?

131. SIR ROBERT CROSS.—The following cutting from the Spectator, which appeared in that publication in 1898, has been forwarded to us, and appears worthy of a corner in S. & D. N. & Q.

THE EDITORS.

SIR,—I send you the enclosed extract from a private letter, thinking that perhaps it may be of interest to your readers:—

“Some of our English cousins appreciative of things of this kind may be interested in knowing that the executive officer of the little corsair—the ‘Gloucester’—has an undoubted descent from Captain Sir Robert Cross, who commanded the little ship ‘Hope’ under Admiral Howard, in that great and amazing fight with the ‘Invincible Armada’ in 1588,—a fight of which the present naval encounters are but the touch of completion, after three hundred years’ delay. Captain Cross was knighted by Queen Elizabeth for his valour. His mortal part lies in a little country churchyard in either Somerset or Dorset, I do not at the present moment remember which. This young lieutenant of the ‘Gloucester’ also comes of the Leighs, or Leghs, of Lyme, and is of the line of that Piers Leigh who recaptured the standard of England at the Battle of Crécy; and King Edward gave him the noble estate of Lyme, in Cheshire. So does ‘history repeat itself,’ sometimes.”
—I am, Sir, &c.,

THEO. HUSE.

Lüttichau Str. 26, Dresden, Saxony.

[Sir Robert Cross was a Somersetshire man, and is buried in Somersetshire,—in Cannington, near Bridgewater, if we mistake not. He was with Essex at the siege of Cadiz, and commanded the ‘Bonaventure’ in that action. The descendants of his sister live in Somersetshire to this day.—ED. Spectator, 1898.]

132. SIR JOHN COVENTRY.—Can any of your readers give me any information concerning the descent of property, real and personal, belonging to Sir John Coventry, of Barton in the county of Somerset, jure uxoris? See Collinson, III. 285, which does not mention any children or other heirs of the said Sir John.
H.C.F.

133. BURIAL BY TORCHLIGHT.—Can any one inform me the reason for burying by torchlight, in 1784, in a small country town in Somerset, a gentleman of small estate, whose only significance was that he had resided therein during all his life?

W. H. COTTELL, Yeolmbridge, Wood Vale, S.E.

134. FAMILY OF 'DE CHEDDRE.'—In the Paper on the Brook family in the Proceedings of the S. Arch. & N. Hist. Soc., Vol. XLIV. part ii, p. 44, the writer states that the earliest recorded mention of the family of de Cheddre comes from the city of Bristol, and that the first of them was John de Cheddre, Steward of Bristol 1288-9. But there is earlier mention of the family than this. In 1236 we have mention made of Walter de Ceddre and Muriela his wife, and under circumstances that do not connect them with Bristol. (cf. Somerset Fines. S.R.S., Vol. IX. pp. 97, 8).

The writer also states that John de Cheddre was succeeded by another John, who in the year 1334 conveyed some property in Redcliffe Street. I think it will be found (Gloucestershire N. & Q., II, 225) that the father of this John was Richard de Cheddre. It may be well also to note that there were several members of the family, in the former half of the 14th century, who were connected with Somerset, although not mentioned in the above Paper. In 1303-4 there was Walter son of Walter de Ceddre (Somerset Fines. S.R.S., IX. 327).

In 1327 Walter de Cheddre, Clerk, was instituted by Bishop John of Drogheda to the rectory of Sampford Brett. (Drok. Reg., Fol. 269b., Somerset Incumbents, p. 428.)

In 1330 Rob. de Ceddre was instituted by Bishop Ralph of Shrewsbury to the rectory of Babcary, (Ralph, Fol. 35b., Somt. Inc., p. 12), resigned it in 1342, and in the same year was instituted to that of Curry Malet (Ralph, Fol. 266, Somt. Inc., p. 349.)

JAMES COLEMAN.

135. ADMIRAL SIR GEORGE WALTON, KNT.—Underneath the Chancel of the small Church of Little Burstead in Essex lie the bodies of several members of the family of Walton of Netherholme in the parish of "Higham" (High Ham) and Shapwick all in the County of Somerset. Thomas Walton of Netherholme was Lord of the Manor of Shapwick about 1550. By his wife, a daughter of Hunton of Knoyle, Co. Wilts, he had, among other children, William Walton, born in Somerset, who was free of the Clothworkers Company of London in 1634, married Ann daughter of Henry Crooke of the Inner Temple, second son of Sir John Crooke of Chilton, Knight, became Lord of the Manor of Little Burstead, and was buried in the Chancel of that Church 16th Oct, 1640, aged 65. But it is his great-grandson, George Walton, who seems fairly to rank among Somersetshire Worthies, that induces me to send these notes. Born in 1665, he entered the Royal Navy and was Captain of the Canterbury of sixty guns in the Mediterranean Fleet, under Sir George Byng, in 1718, who detached him with six small ships to attack the Spanish Squadron in those waters. This he effectively accomplished, sending the following Spartan-like despatch, unequalled for its completeness and brevity in our naval records:—"Sir, "We have taken and destroyed all the Spanish Ships and "vessels which were upon the Coast, number as per margin, "number of Spanish Ships was seven, besides smaller vessels, "number burnt, four ships, a bomb vessel and a fire ship." This was all he said. He died at his house in St. Martins-in-the-Fields, and lies underneath the Chancel of the Church of the little Essex village of Burstead, with the following inscription on a plain flat stone:—"Here lies the body of "the Honourable Sir George Walton Knight late Admiral of the "Blue who died 21st November 1739 in the 74th year of his age." Sir George left an only daughter, Sarah, who married Charles Durand, a French Refugee, whose son, Captain Charles Walton Durand, of the King's Service, had a son Captain Charles Durand who resided at Taunton and whose sister, Ann, married about 1770 at St. Mary's, Taunton, John Cottell of that town. Their descendants still continue. There is a full pedigree of the Somersetshire Waltons in the Heralds' Visitation of Essex 1634, page 317, Harleian Society Publications, with names of Thomas Walton of Netherholme and Shapwick, Co. of Somerset, about 1550, son of John Walton of the same places, William Walton of Little Burstead, Essex, Thomas Walton of Shapwick, James of Berkley Co. of Somerset, Andrew and four daughters, viz., Francis, wife of Batt of Bruham Somerset, Meliora wife of Philip Hext of Shute Co. of Devon, Eleanor wife of John Bicknell of Aller Co. Somerset and Jane wife of John Reeves of Luckington Co. of Wilts, or Somerset.

The Arms of this family are Argent, a fleur de lis, gules.

I have an old deed dated 1774, sealed by an ancestor, John Cottell of Huish, Crewkerne, with these arms. I am led to believe that there was a Cottell-Walton marriage about the end of the 17th Century, perhaps some one may be able to give me information hereon?

W. H. COTTELL, Yeolmbridge, Wood Vale, S.E.

136. WATTS OF NEW ROSE, SOMERSET.—William Watts, Canon of Hereford, 1660, died 1679, has written on the fly-leaf of his Prayer-book, which has descended to our time, some memoranda regarding his family. "Mr. John Watts of New rose in the County of Somerset married Ms Elizabeth Gerard of the same County on the 25h of April, 1598." Their children were Richard, Joane, Elizabeth, John, and William.

Elizabeth married Mr. Thomas Waller, 9th April, 1618, but it is not stated to what place he belonged, and they had issue Elizabeth, Thomas, John, Mary, Ann, Sarah, Francis and William.

Can any one throw light upon the whereabouts of New rose, or give any information regarding John Watts and his son-in-law Thomas Waller? About this time Robert Gerard or Jerard of Sandford Orcas married Elizabeth daughter of Richard Watts of North Cadbury, which seems to suggest a double alliance between these two families. (See Visitation of Somerset, 1623.)

Vol. III.

Vol. III is a parchment covered book measuring 12½ in. long by 8 in. wide, containing some 40 leaves. There are a good many loose ones that probably once belonged to it, being of the same size, besides 8 loose ones rather smaller, containing entries commencing in 1675. Nos. 421 to 451 are probably from some other book.

139. COURTENAY-CLYVEDON, IN SOMERSET.—The almost princely sway of the noble and influential family of Courtenay, independent of documentary record, has left its evidence in many a sculptured token and tinted pane, still remaining in the churches and mansions of the western counties. One of these relationships occurring in Somerset, and connected with the parish of Aller, near Langport, which has hitherto scarcely received the attention it deserves, we propose to notice, and resulting therefrom through a well-dowered daughter came the succession that followed through the families of Botreaux, Moels, Molyns, Hungerford and Hastings, similarly linked together by ennobled distaffs in interesting sequence.

Sir Philip Courtenay was the fifth son of Hugh Courtenay, second Earl of Devon, ob. 1377, by his wife Margaret Bohun, daughter of Humphrey Bohun, Earl of Hereford and Essex, by Elizabeth, daughter of King Edward I., ob. 1391, whose tomb and effigies are in Exeter Cathedral.

The biography of this knight being fully given in Prince's Worthies and Cleaveland's History, a brief notice of its more important features will be sufficient.

Described by Prince as "a true son of Mars, and wholly addicted unto feats of arms," briefly but comprehensively indicates the principal employment of his life, which may be termed that of a soldier of fortune, engaged at intervals both on sea and land in actual warfare, fighting the supposed enemies of his country abroad, and practising at home, between, the scarcely less hazardous pastime of tourney and joust—even more so, as it proved to him eventually.

In 1366, in company with his brothers Hugh and Philip, he was with the Black Prince at "the famous battle of Navaret, in Spain," for which, and other valiant services, he was afterward substantially rewarded. He was knighted by the Black Prince the day before the battle.

His next martial exploit was not so fortunate. In 1378, "the French having landed on our coast and done great spoil," a fleet was organised and sent out under the Earls of Arundel and Salisbury to meet them. The three brothers Courtenay, "having the command of some ships, espying certain vessels belonging to the enemy (off the coast of Brittany), inconsiderately attacked them, being the whole Spanish fleet." The result was, although they fought bravely, they were defeated, "most of the men being gentlemen of Somerset and Devon slain; Sir Philip sore wounded, and Sir Peter taken prisoner and carried to Spain," but was released the following year, on peace being made.

In 1383, Sir Peter, "in requital of the civilities he had received in France when there," had leave from the King, accompanied by a herald and pursuivant, to take over "to certain noblemen of that realm," sundry presents of cloth, "scarlet, black, and russett," also horses, saddles, bows, arrows, and a greyhound, &c.

In 1387 he was made Lord Chamberlain, and in 1389 a Privy Counsellor; and the same year he proceeded to France to take part in a grand tournament, "whereat were present a hundred English gentlemen," and Sir Peter "did notably manifest his military skill and valour," but the French king appears to have stopped the proceedings, and having made Sir Peter "an honourable present, commanded Monsieur de Clary to accompany him to Calais, then in the hands of the English." On their way thither, they visited a relative of Sir Peter's, and afterward on their arrival at Calais, boasting and altercation as to the "magnificence" of the two countries appears to have taken place between his companion and himself, which ended in challenges for the renewal of the combat being given, and they accordingly met between "Calais and Bologne." In "the first course both parties broke well;" in the second, "by the fault of the English knight's armour, he was hurt in the shoulder, his armour being broken." Both the French and English kings were much displeased at this unauthorized renewal of the tourney, and Richard II. gave orders "that the said Sir Peter, now at Calais, should forbear to exercise any feats of arms without the special leave of the Earl Marshal."

In 1387, 11 Richard II., he was made Lord Chamberlain by that king; in 1389, a Privy Counsellor; in 1391, Constable of Windsor Castle; he had also been constituted Captain or Governor of Calais for a term of six years, and elected a Knight of the Garter.

In the celebrated jousts and tournaments held in Smithfield in 1393, Stow relates: "Sir William Darell, Knt., the King's Banner-Bearer of Scotland, challenged Sir Percie (Peter) Courtney, Knt., the King's Banner-Bearer of England, and when they had run certain courses, gave over without conclusion of victory."

And according to Prince, it was owing to his further taking part in one of these dangerous martial engagements that he lost his life, "for it was not long after this (the Smithfield tournament) when this noble chevalier had another combat with a far more mighty champion than any of those afore-mentioned, by whom he was soon foiled, and that was his death, which took him off by an unhappy stroke in the flower of his age. Where he died is not certain." It happened on 2 Feb., 1404-5.

He was buried by the side of his parents, whose tomb with their effigies was formerly within a mortuary chantry, in the south aisle of the nave of Exeter Cathedral, now removed to the south transept. Over Sir Peter, in a flat stone, was placed his effigy (now removed to the south aisle of the choir); he is in the plate and chain armour of the period, the Garter round his knee, and his feet on a dog. The brass is much worn, a part of the ledger inscription only remains; the arms are Courtenay, and Courtenay impaling Bohun. An unusual feature—seemingly allusive to the warlike character of his life—is found in the corner-pieces, which represent birds of prey destroying their quarry. The epitaph is in rhyme:—

*Devoniæ natus Comes Petrusque vocatus
Regis cognatus camerarius intitulus
Calesie gratus Capitaneus ense probatus
Vitæ privatus fuit hinc super astra relatus
Et quia sublatus de mundo transit amatus
Cælo firmatus maneat sine fine beatus*

A very curious circumstance connected with the life of Sir Peter was the belief that he died unmarried. Cleaveland in his History so relates it, and this statement has apparently been followed by all succeeding historians up to a comparatively recent period. Yet an inspection of the escheats, or a glance into Hutchins (History of Dorset), who had consulted them, would at once have dispelled the illusion.

Sir Peter married Margaret, only child and heiress of Sir John de Clyvedon, and widow of Sir John de Sancto Laudo, or St. Loe. Sir John de Clyvedon, her father, who died before 1348, was the son of Sir John de Clyvedon, M.P. for Somerset 1326-7, and Mary Drokensford, daughter of Philip, brother to John Drokensford, Bishop of Bath and Wells, 1309-29. He was the son of Matthew de Clyvedon, descending from the main branch, who appears to have been the first that held Aller, near Langport, died before 1332, and whose descendants were the second, or Aller branch of the Clyvedons.*

Her first husband was Sir John de Sancto Laudo, or St. Loe—of an ancient Somersetshire family, who appear to have been principally of Chew-Magna—and who died 8 Nov. 1375. He was the son of Sir John St. Loe, and Ella his wife, who was the son of John St. Loe, and Joan, daughter of Alexander Cheverell, Sheriff of Wilts, 1308-10. Margaret Clyvedon was his second wife, and by him had two children, Alexander and Elizabeth. Alexander died in his mother's lifetime, leaving his sister Elizabeth sole heiress to her mother, and joint heiress to her father. Sir John St. Loe's first wife was Alice, daughter of Sir John Pavely of Broke, Wilts; she died 21 Oct., 1361. There were two daughters by this marriage—Joan, ob. 1375, married first to Sir John Chidiok, ob. 1390, and secondly to John Bache, ob. 1409-10; Ela, ob. 8 Feb., 1409-10, first to Sir Thomas Bradston, of Bradston, co. Gloucester, ob. 16 May, 1374; secondly to Sir Richard de St. Maur, Knt., summoned to Parliament as Baron St. Maur. senr., 1380, who died 15 May, 1401; buried in Stavordale Priory.

*A full account of the Clyvedon family by the late Sir John Maclean is given in Vol. XLI. Somerset Arch. & N. H. Society's Proceedings, from which many of these particulars are extracted.

After Sir John St. Loe's death on 22 Nov., 1375, an inquisition was held for Wilts, when it was found Alexander his son, then aged half a year, and now surviving, was his next heir, by Margaret, his second wife.

Secondly, she married Sir Peter Courtenay, by whom she had no issue. Sir Peter died before his wife, on 2 Feb., 1404-5, and an inquisition was taken on Saturday before Passion Sunday, 6 Henry IV. (4 April, 1405), on the death of Sir Peter Courtenay, Knt. It was found that the said Sir Peter died on the second of February last past (1404-5), without issue, and that Edward, Earl of Devon, is his kinsman and nearest heir, viz., son of Edward, brother of the said Sir Peter. The jurors found that the said Sir Peter held, in right of Margaret his wife, who is still surviving, the following manors, viz., Mayden-Newton (and three others) in Dorset; Little Cheveral (and another) in Wilts; Alre, its Advowson and Chantry, Cheddre (with nine others and two advowsons) in Somerset; with remainder, after the decease of Margaret his wife, to William Botreaux, son of Elizabeth, daughter of the said Margaret by John de Sancto Laudo, her former husband.

Lady Margaret Courtenay died 5 Jan., 1411-2; her will was proved 7 Feb. following. In it she desires to be buried in the Cathedral Church of Bath, "near the body of my late husband, John St. Lo," and directs prayers to be said for the souls of herself, her first husband, John de St. Laudo, for his father, and Ela his wife, my late husband's mother.

For her large possessions three inquisitions were held: for Wilts, 28 Jan., 1411; for Dorset, 21 Nov., 1412; and for Somerset, 19 Jan., 1411-2. Her grandson William, Lord Botreaux (ob. 1462) was found her next heir; her daughter Elizabeth had predeceased her twenty-two years, ob. 14 Sept. 1389; as also her daughter's husband William, Lord Botreaux (father of the preceding), sixteen years, ob. 25 May, 1395.

Among the numerous manors Lady Margaret brought her husband Sir Peter was the chief family patrimony of Aller, near Langport, and interesting evidence of their alliance exists in the Church there. It may be fairly assumed they built its substantial tower, with its bold turret, and unique features within. Although situate at the west end, it is supported inside on three fine arches, with buttresses springing from the nave walls, and two narrow passages, or side aisles, on the north and south sides, outside the arches.

On the corbels of the label of the west window are two sculptured shields; on the dexter side, Three torteaux and label (COURTENAY), on the sinister, Courtenay impaling, Three escallops (CLYVEDON of Aller). The Aller branch of Clyvedon bore, Ermine, three escallops, gules, found on the seal of her great-uncle Matthew de Clyvedon, 34 Edward III., 1361; crest, an Escallop between two cow's horns. The arms of the main branch were, Or, a lion rampant sable; of St. Loe, Argent, a bend sable—a label of three; crest, a Phoenix or, vulning herself.

Under an ogee arch in the chancel is the effigy of a knight in chain and plate armour somewhat similar to Sir Peter, referable to the middle of the fourteenth century, and may represent an earlier Clyvedon, but there is no inscription or arms. and near it a gravestone, preserved and set upright, commemorates Lady Margaret's great grandson, Reginald Botreaux, which will be further referred to in a succeeding account.

141. THE REV. JOHN COLLINSON.—His decease is thus recorded in Felix Farley's Bristol Journal of August 31, 1793:—

“On Tuesday [27th] died at the Hotwells, after a lingering illness, the Rev. John Collinson, F.S.A. . . . the ingenious author of the History and Antiquities of Somersetshire.”

And in the Bath Chronicle (at which office Collinson's Somerset was printed) of August 29, 1793, it is also stated that the historian “died at the Hotwells.” Surely the event occurred at the Hotwells, Bristol, as mentioned in the Preface to the “Index to Collinson's Somerset,” recently brought out by the Somersetshire Archæological Society, and not at Bath, as Mr. A. S. Bicknell says (S. & D. N. & Q., VI. p. 179).

Collinson was buried at Long Ashton on September the 1st, 1793. I am glad that Mr. Bicknell has corrected the erroneous date, “27 September,” of Collinson's death, as given in Foster's Alumni Oxonienses, and in the brief notice of him in the Dictionary of National Biography.

In an article on Coleridge, Southey, and the Bristol Library Society in Chambers's Journal for 1890, it is erroneously said that

"Collinson, the author of the volumes on Somerset," was a member of the Society. The writer has confused the Rev. Richard Collinson with the Somerset historian. The former was the non-resident rector of King's Weston, Somerset, and a founder-member of the Bristol Library. He died at 48, Park Street, Bristol, in June, 1811, aged 73.

143. COURT ROLLS OF THE MANOR OF CRANDON CUM PURITON.—In the Exchequer at Taunton Castle there is a book bound with parchment containing the following court rolls of the manor of Crandon cum Puriton, near Bridgwater. On the cover of the book is written “Will: Harvey.” Mr. Harvey, who was under-steward and clerk of the Castle, was probably steward of Crandon cum Puriton as well. These court rolls, which speak for themselves, show how in course of time a manor, through courts not being properly held, becomes a reputed manor. Among the “homage” in one of these rolls appears the names of Charles, Duke of Somerset, the heirs of Charles Pim, Bart. John Ashford Esq., Edward Clarke Esq. and Francis Rolles, knight. At the head of the tenants of the Court of Frankpledge is Benjamin Blake, probably a younger brother of the famous admiral. After the name of one of the tenants, William Barnes, is written “natural,” which appears to imply that he was a copyholder pure et simple. The Jurors have jur’ written after their names.

146. THE KNELL, WIMBORNE MINSTER (VI. xlv. 99, xlv. 130).—It is the custom to ring the Knell between the hours of 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. only. First, the whole of the 8 bells are successively tolled, beginning with the first or smallest bell—4 strokes on each bell for a male, 3 strokes on each bell for a female, adults and children alike. The Tenor Bell is then rung up and sounded 6 times 6, viz. : 6 strokes, and then an interval of 2 minutes, and this repeated 6 times.

The Tenor Bell is then rung down.

At funerals the bells are sounded in the same way, the strokes on the first bell beginning about the time the procession leaves the house for the Cemetery. The only difference is that the Tenor Bell is not rung, but tolled.

The Curfew Bell is still rung at this Church at 8 p.m. every night in the year, and the Matins Bell is also rung every morning, except on Saints' Days, at 6 a.m. during the summer half-year, and at 7 a.m. during the winter half. This bell is also rung at mid-day. The original Matins Bell which, was removed from the Minster many years ago, still hangs at Holt Chapel, formerly attached to the Minster; and the oak frame on which it was hung can still be seen in the upper compartment of the Lantern Tower.

WALTER J. FLETCHER.

The Chantry, Wimborne.

147. AT PORTESHAM the Knell is tolled for a quarter of an hour, commencing usually, one hour after the death. But no tolling is done before 8 a.m., nor after sunset. No indication is made of age or sex.

AT ABBOTSBURY.—“When the breath has passed away from the body, one hour is allowed to pass before anything is done. Then, after all is finished that is necessary and the corpse is arranged in the grave-clothes, the woman who attends to this calls on the sexton to give him notice.”

"From two to three hours after the death the Knell is tolled for about 10 minutes, then the bell is allowed to ring itself out, and when it is quite silent, one stroke is given for a child, two for a woman and three for a man. No age is rung out."

(There are six bells.)

148. THE BROOK FAMILY.—Proceedings, Somerset Arch. & N. H. Soc. (XLIV. i. 78).—I hope these few notes will strengthen the heraldry in this valuable paper.

Page 11, Christenstow. "Az. a bend per bend indented or and erm. betw two cotises of the last" (Risdon), no meaning without the italics. Page 13, Bryan de Goritz. Risdon says Gonytz bore those arms. The Gouiz were a great family in Dorset, but they had a different coat; but Papworth gives Brian de Gouvis as "Vairy or and az. a bend gu." Page 37, "Mascles voided"; this is tautology, a mascle is always voided; it may be voided a different tincture to the field. Page 39, "Champourne" should read Chaperonné, i.e., Hoodlike. Papworth says, "per chevron wavy," but the coat is "Chequy arg. and gu. a chief chaperonné of the 2nd and or," Hanberke. On Sir Nicholas' brass on the dexter side of the head is a fish embowed lying on its side upon what is either a trivet or dish; this is no doubt his crest or badge; I cannot find this, and should be glad of any information; Mr. Rogers makes no note on it: one would think the arms, &c., foreign. Pages 43-4—1, "Arg. a mullet of six points pierced with a martlet in centre for difference gu." would seem to be Harpenden, impaling quarterly 1 and 4 Mortimer, 2 and 3 not St. George but De Burgh, Or a cross gu., the alliance of the two families. 2, Gu. on a chevron or three estoiles sa. Pages 61-2 and plate—1, "Arg. on a chev. az. three garbs or," Cradock Newton, not as on page 58. 2, "Erm. three (not four as on page 58) fusils in fess sa.," Sherborne. 3, "Or four fusils in fess az. a bend gu." Collinson says Pennington, the Ashmole MS. Angell. I cannot find any Pennington with less than five fusils, except in one instance which quotes Pole, who does not mention the family in his work. Gloucester Visitation, 114, gives no marriage between Sherborne and Perrott with either family, so it is most likely an old quartering of the last. 4, Gu. three pears, 2 and 1 pendant or," Perrott. 5, Collinson says, "Sa. a lion ramp. billey or," really Sa. billey a lion ramp. or, but gives no name; Mr. Rogers says Norris. Now the charge would have to be changed to a cross to be this. The Ashmole MS. says Harvie, but I can find no such; Papworth gives Fillesworth, Nartoft and West; it may be one of these, but the connection is not found yet. This 5 quartering is impaled with Newton at Court de Wick (see Collinson III. 618), and also Sherborne seems to be impaled with Chedder, 619; so it looks as if 1 and 2 (Newton and Sherborne) and 5 and 6 (? Harvie and Chedder) were quarterings round which the others have been built. No. 5 would then come under one of the Welsh marriages in the Glouc. Vis., 1114. Is it possible that the billets are meant and intended for Erm-es-ois? when, with a lion ramp az., gu., sa., it would be a true Welsh coat; but this would entirely contradict the Ashmole MS. reading of Harvie. 6, "Sa. a chevron erm. betw. three escallops arg.," Chedder. 7, "Azure a bend betw. six fleurs-de-lys or," Hampton. 8, "Ermine a fess gu.," Bitton. 9, "Gu. a bend betw. six crosses crosslet or," Furneaux. 10, Collinson says, "Sa. on a chevron betw. three leaves or a mullet of the field." Perhaps he meant eaglet, as it is rightly so in plate. Gloucester Visitation says "trees" instead of leaves; Ashmole MS. says Caudecot: this would be right marshalling, as the alliance between Gourney and Hampton was through Cadicott (see Weaver's Somerset Visitation, 27). The register of this coat seems lost. 11, "Paly of six or and az.," Gourney. 12, "Arg. a saltire humetty flory at the ends gu.," Harpetre, impaling "Barry of eight or and gu.," Pointz; 2, "Az. three cinquefoils or," Bardolfe; 3, "Az. three escallops or.," Mallett; 4, "Quarterly per fess indented arg. and az.," Acton; 5, "Paly of six or and az. on a fess gu., three mullets arg.," Clambowe; 6, "Gu. a chevron betw. ten crosses patty, 6 and 4 arg.," Berkeley; 7, "Quarterly gu. and or a bend arg.," FitzNichol; 8, not as Mr. Rogers reads it, but "Arg. a fess and canton gu.," Woodville. Page 63, Duke's coat is "Per fess," not pale.

149. PERAMBULATIONS OF THE SOMERSET FORESTS.—It is unnecessary to recount here the historical events which led to the various perambulations of the royal forests in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward I.; more especially as no Somerset perambulations made in the earlier reign are to be found among the documents at the Public Record Office. The earliest which survive are those made in the seventh year of Edward I. The next in order of date were made in the twenty-sixth year of the same reign, but no official record of them is known to exist. Very fortunately, however, their text has been preserved in a Register of Wells Cathedral, from which it has been printed in Collinson's History of Somerset (Vol. III., pp. 56-60). In the twenty-eighth year of Edward I. there was another perambulation, which is recorded in the great Roll of Perambulations (Forest Proceedings (Ancient) Chancery No. 102). From this roll the perambulations of the forests of North Pedderton and Nerroche are here printed. A subsequent number will contain those of the remaining forests in Somerset.

150. HOLWELL MANOR HOUSE.—Holwell is a parish in the county of Somerset, entirely surrounded by, and for all county purposes forming part of Dorset. It is situated 6 miles from Sherborne, and has an acreage of 2,356 acres, with a population of about 400.

The chief feature of antiquity in the parish is the old Manor House, of which the illustration is an engraving from a photograph by Mr. A. Gosney, of Sherborne.

The House bears great marks of antiquity both inside and out. It appears to have been originally surrounded by a moat, remains of which are still to be seen on its south side, and on the side of the front entrance door is a remarkably ancient looking chimney to a fireplace within the House, rising from the ground, and formed of large paving-stones.

We gather from what Coker, in his Survey of Dorsetshire (written between 1616 and 1633), tells us that the House was the principal lodge of the Forest of Blackmore, and held by William de Brett and his successors by service as the King's Forester of Blackmore, and that the office was long since lost by the Forest being disforested; that the House subsequently belonged to the Abbey of Abbotsbury, upon the suppression of which, it was purchased by Sir Giles Strangways, and subsequently came to James Hannam (a member of a very old and still existing family in Dorset), who Coker states was then living in the House.

Through successive owners after Hannam, the House, some years ago, became the property of the late much-lamented and well-known sportsman—Marwood Shuttleworth Yeatman, who resided in it up to his death, when High Sheriff of Dorset in 1891, and it now belongs to his family. D. H. SERRELL.

151. ANCIENT FORM OF ELECTION TO DEANERY OF WELLS.
—The process of appointment of the Dean of Wells is exemplified fully in the two cases of the appointment of Dean Stephen Pempel, 1361—1378, and Dean John Fordham, 1378.

1. The Chapter is summoned for the election of a Dean in place of John de Carleton. R. 1, f. 247.

2. Licence is given for the election by Bp. Ralph. Wiveliscombe, Sept. 3, 1361.

3. The king, Edward III. writes (in French) to the Chapter recommending 'Mestre Willan de Loughteburgh, docteur en lois'—dated 'à l'abbay de Beaulieu,' Sept. 6. R. 1, f. 248 in dors.

4. The Chapter answer (in French), begging leave to decline him; they have already chosen one whom they think in their conscience a fit and proper person. Sept. 28.

5. William de Camel, precentor, is elected, but declines.

6. Another Chapter is summoned to elect. R. 1, f. 249 in d.

7. Stephen Pempel is elected Nov. 3, 1361, and two of the Canons are deputed to present him to the Bishop. R. 1, f. 250.

8. The Chapter formally certify to the Bishop the election, Nov. 4. R. 1, f. 250 in d.

Dean Pempel died in the Deanery Feb. 2, 1378. R. 1, f. 267.

The course of proceedings is set out more fully in the appointment of John Fordham, Dean 1378, and successor of Stephen Pempel. R. 1, f. 268.

The formal certificate of the Chapter contains a recital of the process of election :

The Bishop's licence to elect a Dean, given in answer to petition of Chapter, is obtained Feb. 12; the Chapter is summoned Feb. 22—all Canons cited. On that day the Chapter met, and this is the recital of the forms observed :

- (a) Bell rung.
- (b) Mass of the Holy Spirit sung.
- (c) Sermon.
- (d) Hymn, 'Veni Creator.'
- (e) Præconisation at door of Chapter-house (ut est moris), of absent Canons; about 40 were present. The absent in pœna contumaciæ were formally excluded from all share of election.
- (f) Then, 'with sudden and common impulse, under inspiration of the Holy Spirit,' they elected John Fordham as Dean.
- (g) The Canons walk in procession from the Chapter-house to the High Altar, singing Te Deum.
- (h) The publication in English of the election is made at the High Altar by the Bishop's official.
- (i) The Bishop's confirmation is obtained, March 9, 1379.

152. WILLIAM DYER, A SOMERSET ROYALIST IN NEW ENGLAND.—I enclose for publication in the pages of S. & D. N. & Q. a letter of some historical interest, written under exceptionally pathetic circumstances by my grandfather’s great-grandfather’s grandfather, William Dyre (Dyer), a Somersetshire man, who, along with eighteen others, founded the town of Portsmouth, Rhode Island, on March 7th, 1638, and was one of eight Englishmen who founded Newport, Rhode Island, on April 28th, 1639, upon which day he was elected Clerk of the new Colony.

He was a Somersetshire man (1) according to a tradition which I have traced back among his numerous descendants in America as far as the unpublished memoirs of Joseph Chesbrough Dyer, a great-great-great grandson of his, who was born in New England in 1780, and whose life (most of it having been spent in Manchester) may be found in the Dictionary of National Biography;

(2) This family tradition is in a measure confirmed by the peculiar orthography of the word soar, spelt zore in the appended letter, where I have on that account italicized it.⁽¹⁾

I have, in the course of several years past, looked up facts and dates about a very large number of Englishmen who lived at the end of the sixteenth and the beginning of the seventeenth centuries, and bore the name of William Dyer. The only one with whom it is possible to identify the writer of the appended letter is entered in the 1623 Visitation of Somersetshire among the Dyers of Sharpham Park, Glastonbury, as William, the eldest son of George Dyer, of Bratton St. Maur (Seymour), near Wincanton, and a great-nephew of the distinguished Elizabethan Judge, Sir James Dyer. This George Dyer of Bratton was a nephew of Sir James Dyer, and the grandfather of Sir William Swinnerton Dyer, whose father's elder brother was, according to my identification, the writer of the above letter. There is no mention of this American Colonist, William Dyer, in English documents other than Colonial, unless we identify him with his namesake, William Dyer, stated to have been 36 years old in 1623, according to the Somerset Visitation of that year. The only mention of the latter upon which I have come is in the will of his grandmother, Jane Dyer, of Bratton Seymour, widow of John Dyer, jun., of "Wyncaulton, Somerset"—see Brown's Somerset Wills (6th Ser., pp. 60 and 58). The baptism of this William Dyer's younger brother and sisters was recorded at Milbourne Port, but no record of his baptism is found, so far as I know. There are some reasons for believing that this William Dyer followed the sea to start with, and before he emigrated to New England, but I doubt very much whether he can be identified with the Captain Dyer who gave evidence at the trial of Sir Walter Raleigh. This trial took place in 1603, when the William Dyer of the 1623 visitation could not have been more than about 16 years old, while the New England colonist—who died about 1677—can hardly have been older. In the following sketch of William Dyer's life, I venture to take for granted that the colonist and the son of George Dyer of Bratton can be identified.

Whatever seafaring experiences William Dyer may be supposed to have had in his earliest manhood, we find him at the age of 40 or thereabout (1627) in London as a "milliner in the New Exchange." There is no trace of him on the records at Haberdashers' Hall, but something might perhaps be found in the records of the Mercers' Company. He may perfectly well have been a seafaring man enrolled as a member of a London Guild. One of his father's half-brothers was Richard Dyer, "citizen and Merchant Taylor of London," whose will was proved at St. Dunstan's in the West on July 27th, 1586, and contains a bequest to "my brother William," our William Dyer's youngest uncle and putative godfather (Brown's Somerset Wills, 6 Ser., p. 59). For the fact that he was a milliner in the New Exchange, we depend upon two statements to that effect by no less a person than Governor John Winthrop made in 1637 (October)—see Colonial Papers, Vol. IX., No. 74; and again in 1638—see Winthrop's Diary.

(1) The question has been raised by an expert whether an initial z for s, in such a word as soar—which does not, like genuine dialect words, go back to an old English original—can be evidence of the Somersetshire habit of speech. In well attested examples of Somersetshire we have, however, such forms as zity for city and vashion for fashion, and with these zore=soar must, I think, be classed. The publication of the letter is postponed until the next number of the S. & D. N. & Q.

It is well attested that the Dyers in Somersetshire were on the losing side in the struggle between Charles I. and the Roundheads. Accordingly, the falling fortunes of his people might be assigned as William Dyer's reason for emigrating to the Massachusetts Bay. He appears in Boston, having married, presumably after he emigrated. However that may be, he and Mary his wife joined the Church of the Reverend Mr. Wilson at Boston in 1635 (December), and on the 20th of the same month their first son and child, Samuel, was there baptized. He married, then, at the age of 47. It has been conjectured—on what grounds I know not—that Mary, his wife, was of the same family (a Somerset family?) with Odias (Herodias) Longe, mentioned in the will of John Ayshford (Ashford), of Devon, a planter in Barbadoes—Brown's Somerset Wills (4th Ser., p. 58).

However sincerely a man of Somersetshire Royalist stock might conceive himself to adhere to the views of a congregation chiefly composed of East Anglian Puritans, the essential antagonism between the West and the East could not fail to manifest itself in the long run. Scarcely a year passed between William Dyer's reception into Mr. Wilson's Church and his signature, on March 15th, 1637, of a remonstrance affirming the innocence of Mr. Wheelwright, and that the Court had condemned "the truth of Christ." For this he was disfranchised just eight months afterwards. The galling and unnatural intimacy with people naturally antagonistic to him to which William Dyer and his wife during these eight months were forced to submit, is vividly shown by a curious paper now at the Public Record Office, London, stamped as of the Conway papers (Colonial Papers, IX., 74), and signed by "John Wentropp, Gent. of the Mattachusetts." It is entitled: "A monstrous berth brought forth att Boston in New England, October, 1637." Here Governor Winthrop sets forth that "One Mary Dyer, wife of William Dyer, sometime milliner in the New Exchange, London, being both young and very comely persons, was delivered of a woman-child still-borne (having life a few howers before) two months before the time, yet as large as ordinary children are." Its "ears were like an ape's,

. . the nose grew hookeing upwardes, . . itt had noe forehead, but in the place therof were fower perfect hornes"; . . it was "full of scales and sharpe prickes, like a thornbacke . . instead of toes itt had on each foot three clawes with sharpe talents like a fowle." And then the courtly Governor Winthrop, who might have been recording in the above fantastic and gruesome minutiae some old-wives' tale current in the colony, is at pains to declare in closing this discreditable document: "I saw this monster and doe affirme this relacôn to be true." How came it that so sensible a man could think he had reason to vouch for such a monstrous absurdity? The answer appears in the same Governor Winthrop's own diary, edited by the acute Mr. Savage. There Winthrop says that none but Mrs. Hutchinson and the midwife, "one Hawkins' wife, a rank familist also, and another woman had a glimpse of it, who not being able to keep counsel as the other two did, some rumor began to spread that the child was a monster." When Mrs. Hutchinson, for theological views akin to Mr. Wheelwright's, was expelled from the congregation, her friend Mrs. Dyer walked out of the Church with her. "For Mrs. Dyer going forth with her," says Winthrop, "a stranger asked what woman it was. The others answered it was the woman which had the monster." An elder taxed Mrs. Hutchinson with having concealed the event, and she declared that she had acted by advice of Mr. Cotton, the well-known divine. Winthrop then sent for Mr. Cotton, having first interviewed the midwife, whom he regarded seriously as a witch. The description quoted above is a verbatim reproduction of the statement made to him by this woman. He had the infant exhumed "with advice of some other of the magistrates and of the elders of Boston, and though it were much corrupted, yet most of those things were to be seen, as the hornes and claws, the scales, &c." After this the excellent Winthrop adds that there were alarming noises and shakings that accompanied the birth of this child. Winthrop seems to have spent a great deal of time in disseminating accounts of this visitation of God upon the unorthodox. Roger Williams at Providence had all particulars from him, and writes back, "I also thank you for that sad relation of the monster, &c. The Lord speaks once and twice: He be pleased to open all our ears to His discipline." Governor Bradford of Plymouth also writes to Winthrop: "I thank you for your letter touching Mrs. Hutchinson. I heard since of a monstrous and prodigious birth which she should disown amongst you." Even the father of the child had to take his part of blame for this family misfortune—made into a crime by theological hatred. As Winthrop piously relates: "The father of this monster . . was, the next Lord's Day, questioned in the Church for divers monstrous errors, as for denying all inherent righteousness, &c., which he maintained, and was for the same admonished." Plainly Winthrop agreed with the godly Welde, of the same Colony, in thinking here was a case of God "testifying His displeasure against their opinions and practices as clearly as if He had pointed with His finger, in causing the two fomenting women, in time of the height of their opinions, to produce out of their wombs, as before they had out of their brains, such monstrous births. . . ." Mr. Savage, Winthrop's editor, rightly calls attention to the fact that the persecutions instituted against Mrs. Dyer and Mrs. Hutchinson were the cause of these physical disasters so fantastically misrepresented by Winthrop, Welde, and others, acting as "proxies or attorneys for the Most High, to Whose displeasure they scrupled not in attributing the cross accidents that befel their opponents." From Mr. Cotton, who had advised the hushing up of the whole misfortune, the congregation required and received a handsome and public apology.

The exasperation of William Dyer, who was disfranchised, on November 15th, 1637, within a month of his theological admonition and of so gross an outrage upon his family life, can only have been increased when, on November 20th, five days afterwards, he and others were disarmed "because the opinions and revelations of Mr. Wheelwright and Mrs. Hutchinson have seduced and led into dangerous errors many of the people here in New England." More than ever, he and his wife might pass with Winthrop for "very censorious and troublesome," as indeed he describes them. It is accordingly not a surprise to find that these two much outraged persons left the Massachusetts as soon as they might. In March, 1638, William Dyer joined in founding Portsmouth, R.I., and in April, 1639, he figures among the founders of Newport, R.I. Indeed, his motives for abandoning the Massachusetts Bay Colony are set forth in the preamble of the Charter of Rhode Island as subsequently granted to him among others by Charles II. in 1663. The grantees, it is there stated, "did not only, with the encouragement of His Majesty's progenitors, transport themselves into America, but not being able to bear in those parts their different apprehensions in religious concernments, again left their desirable habitations, and transplanted themselves into the midst of the most potent Indian people of that country. . . ."

So much remains to be said of the career of William Dyer in Rhode Island—of the trial, condemnation, and execution of his wife, and of the experiences of their second son, William Dyer, jun., Surveyor-General of Customs in North America for Charles II. and James II., that I reserve these topics for a second communication.

155. STANDERWICK FAMILY|(VI. xlv. 108).—The reference I. 406 is to the second edition of Hutchins' History of Dorset, where it says, under Lyme Regis, "Inscription to John Standerwick, merchant, twice Mayor, ob. 26 March, 1708." On page 113 of current vol. of S. & D. N. & Q. there is an administration of John Standerwick, Lyme Regis, Bennett relict, 1 July, 1703. It may not be the same individual, but, on the other hand, 1708 in the second edition of Hutchins' may be a mistake for 1703.

Whether the inscription is still in the Church, or was not there when the third edition of Hutchins' was compiled, I cannot say.

157. SEALS ON DEEDS (VI. xlv. 230).—The last sentence of Mr. W. H. Cottell's communication induces me to mention my own experience regarding seals on deeds. After the end of the 16th century they are only occasionally the seals of the persons who sign. By that time most people who had the signing of deeds were able to sign their own names, and so the actual sigillum began to lose its importance. A number of deeds which I have examined appear to have been sealed by the lawyer who prepared them; the same seal for all the different signatories. In one case a deed was signed by five persons, called the Lords and Ladies of the Manor of Evercreech (date 1731)—persons who are known to have borne arms, and to have had seals of their own,—but there is the same seal for all on the deed, and that not their own coat of arms. I doubt if any theory can be founded on deed seals regarding alliances.

158. BROUGHTON COAT OF ARMS.—I have lately come across a curious sidelight to the difficulty of identifying this coat as shown on the Vernai tomb in Stoke Courcy Church and in the Sands window, as well as the query Cavendish marriage in Som. Arch. & Nat. Hist. Soc. Proc., XLIII., Pt. ii. 11. It is that in the Harl. Soc. Som. Visitation, 1623 (Colby), page 16, arms are given to Browne, "three stags' heads cabossed." Now the Brownes never bore this coat; this is the footnote of one of the Heralds appended to the Broughton above, who evidently had been accustomed to blazon it thus; therefore Oliver Hewish in 1495 may have married a Broughton, when there was no chevron in the coat; whilst after 1591, the date of the grant by R. B. Rouge Croix of a chevron for difference from Cavendish, another Broughton may have married a Hewish. F. WERE.

159. JOHN ELLIOTT, M.D. OF CHARD.—In Lysons's Environs of London (Vol. II., p. 605), under Paddington is related "John Elliott, buried 26 July, 1787," from the Register, and it is added

"This unfortunate man was son of a clothier at Chard, in Somersetshire. The circumstance of his firing a pistol at Miss Boydell (now Mrs. Nicoll), as she was walking in Leicester Fields, is within the recollection of the public. He was tried at the Old Bailey, and acquitted of intention to murder, but was detained to be tried for an assault. During this restraint, before the expiration of July, he destroyed himself by an obstinate refusal of all food. He appears to have been an ingenious, disappointed man, whose state of mind latterly perhaps more than bordered on insanity. He was the author of several works on subjects connected with his profession, Philosophical Observations on the Senses—a Life of Dr. Fothergill, and a collection of his works—A Medical Pocket Book—A Treatise on Medical Waters, and the method of making them artificially—and The Elements of Natural Philosophy, as connected with Medicine; and was concerned also with the Medical Journal. Dr. Elliott was only 39 years of age at the time of his death."

The lady's name, both single and married, is suggestive of Art and Archæology. R.

160. PLOX (VI. xlv. 110).—I find in Wright's Provincial Dictionary the following words, together with the districts in which they are used:—

Plack, a plot of ground. Leic.

Pleck, a small enclosure, a field. Warw.

Plock, a small field. Heref.

The Plox district in Bruton is a narrow strip of land between the river and the road which passes the great wall. M.C.

161. DORSET MEN'S GRAVES ABROAD (VI. xlv. 123).—Can the following entry, which is copied from Book, C 12, among the Dorchester Records, relate to the widow of the Fudge whose monument our correspondent, C, met with in Ceylon?

EDITOR FOR DORSET.

1656, June 4th. "This day the widow Rebecka Fudge having made complaynt of her husband's death in the Indies, was promised so much favor of this Comp' at her request that they will be content to forbear the three pounds ten shillings, remaynder of the fine for the house sold her by the towne in Melcomb, until shee shall receive her husband's pay from the State, and so the deed was delivered up to her, the house proving very old and rotten, and a harder bargain than wee knew of. And therevpon the sayd Rebecka Fudge doth promise to pay the sayd three pounds ten shillings when shee shall receive her husband's due from the State.

The mr'ke of + Rebecka Fudge."

162. DORSET MUSTERS, TEMPORE HEN. VIII. (V. xxxviii. 212).

Since the notes on this subject from the miscellaneous books of the Exchequer were written, two additional Dorset muster rolls have become accessible to searchers at the Record Office, the reference to one being found in a new index of "Accounts of the Exchequer," and to the other in the last-published volume of Henry VIII.'s "Domestic State Papers." The former, numbered 61 (36), and dated 34 Hen. VIII., relates to the eastern part of the county, including the hundred of Pimperne and the borough of Blandford, of which I previously stated no returns could be found. The latter is apparently a remnant of a muster from the neighbourhood of Corfe Castle, of which the lists for the hundreds of Haselor and Rushmore and a portion of the borough of Wareham alone remain. The date 1539 is written on the cover, which is modern. The equipment of the men in these additional hundreds and boroughs, who number about 634, did not differ materially from that previously described, but it included a gun at Blandford, where also three men are classed as "gunners." Firearms must have been objects of curiosity in Dorset at this period, for there are altogether only some half-a-dozen "hand guns," or "gonnes," to be found on these returns for Henry VIII.'s reign, though the Dorset musters of twenty-six years later show harquebuses in considerable numbers.

Among the notable names on these two newly-found rolls were John Dacombe, esq., of Steepleton (4 harnesses with bills, bows, &c.); Thomas Coker, gent., of Ashe in Stourpaine (a horse, harness, sword, dagger, and bill); John Rogers, knight, of Bryanston ("a complete harnesse 40 alon' Revetts 12 bowes 20 bills and 8 haks"); George Lovell, gent., of Antiocheton [Tarrant Rawson], who contributed 3 harnesses with bills and bows; and Roger Clavell of Creech (harnesses and bows, &c., for three archers), below whose name are entered John and Walter Clavell and two others as "s'vaunts to Mr. Clavell." William Bonde, of the tithing of Povington, possessed two harnesses, and two servants of William Bound occur in the same tithing. This was presumably William Bond of Lutton, which, according to Hutchins, formed part of the manor of Povington. Among the entries under the borough of Blandford is the name of John Ryvys (2 harnesses and a horse), "Damerecot" being written in the margin opposite his name. It should be noted that Hutchins' pedigree of the Ryves family states that Damory Court was purchased by Robert Reve or Ryve in 3 Edward VI., some seven years later than the date of this muster roll.

The names most frequently met with are Fry (of which family nine members were scattered through the tithings of Pimperne, Launston, Tarrant Gunville, and Langton), Pytt and Godard at Blandford, Fouke at West Holme, Baker and Farrell at Knoll, Trew at Blachenwell, Baker and Gould at Bradle, Franke at Creech, Corryng at Arne, Butler and Gyllott at Winterborne [Zelston], and Geryell at Wareham.

In the previous notice of Dorset musters I made a mistake in copying the name of the Mayor of Lyme Regis. In place of John Battyn, I should have written Thomas Battyn.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

164. BACKWELL, SOMERSET: COLLECTIONS FOR A PAROCHIAL HISTORY OF, by Rev. G. S. Master. Printed for subscribers by the Northern Branch of the Somersetshire Archæological and Natural History Society. Bristol: Lavars and Co., 1898. 8vo. pp. 69, with 4 illustrations.

We congratulate the Northern Branch of the S. A. & N. H. S. and the Editor, Mr. Master, on adding another Parochial History to those which they have already issued. These books will be of the greatest possible value to that yet-to-be-found person who will be rash enough to undertake to compile another History of Somerset.

For our own part, we are not at all anxious that such a person should be found; for we are quite sure that the time is not yet come. It will be time enough to think about a History of the County when the Inquisitiones post mortem relating to it are printed, and that will not be in our lifetime.

This history of Backwell treats of the Parish, Rectory and Vicarage, Registers, Communion Plate, Churchwardens' Books, Benefactions, S. Katherine's Felton, National School, Parish Church. It is enriched with four excellent illustrations.

There is only one little grumble we want to make. There is no Index! and it is a cardinal doctrine that we should like to see taught to children at the top of their copy-books:

EVERY BOOK MUST HAVE AN INDEX.

165. THE STORY OF THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES OF DORSET, from their foundation to the present time. By W. Densham and J. Ogle. MDCCCXCIX. [sic]; pp. xiv. and 433. Demy 8vo.: Mate and Sons, Bournemouth.

The Rev. J. Ogle, of Sherborne, in conjunction with Rev. W. Densham, has issued a history of the Congregational Churches of Dorset. The work (in addition to an Appendix and an Index), consists of a series of articles, in alphabetical order, under the names of the towns and villages concerned, giving a brief but condensed account of the various communities in Dorset which adhere to the Congregational form of Church government. These historical sketches are brightly written, and contain a vast amount of information not easily obtainable by the general reader, and will be perused with interest by many who, though not members of the Denomination concerned, are in other ways connected with the county.

There are, no doubt, many more particulars which might be gathered respecting the persons named in this book. John Sprint, for instance, the author of a sermon which all ladies should read, who exercised his ministry at Portland, Milborne Port, and elsewhere, who wore a cassock, and a rose in his hat, was probably grandson of John Sprint, Vicar of Thornbury, co. Glouc., whose father was Dean of Bristol and died in February, 1589-90. Is not the rose a reminiscence of the Decanal dignity of his ancestor?

Hugh Gundry, ejected from Mapperton in 1662, was ordained Priest by the Bishop of Bristol, 9th March, 1627-8.

Francis Bampffield was invited by the Corporation of Dorchester to succeed Stanley Gower at H. Trinity in July, 1660. To this parish George Hammond was eventually appointed. Later on (21st Oct., 1664) Hammond would have had the offer of the Mastership of the Free School at Dorchester had he been willing to accept it.

But all such particulars can only be collected by long extended research in many quarters, and Mr. Ogle is to be congratulated on the success he has attained. But why has Mr. Mate dated the book a hundred years in advance? This is indeed "taking time by the forelock"! Δ.

SEAL OF MARGARET DE BOTREAUX.

FROM THE BOTREAUX GRAVESTONE.--ALLER CHURCH.

WILLIAM LORD BOTREAUX, AND ELIZABETH BEAUMONT HIS WIFE.
NORTH CADBURY CHURCH.

167. MOELS-BOTREAUX OF NORTH CADBURY, SOMERSET.—The earliest recorded account of the “ancient and noble race of Moelis, alias Mules de Valence,” appears to have been in Devon, wherein at the time of the Domesday survey, a Roger de Molis possessed Lew-Trenchard, and other estates in that county; and descending from him was:—

I. Nicholas de Moels, who was a stirring and influential man in the reign of Henry III.,—1216-72,—Sheriff alternately of Hampshire, Yorkshire and Kent, Governor of the Castles of Winchester, Caermarthen, Cardigan, Rochester and Canterbury, at various times, and had custody of Guernsey, Jersey, and Alderney. In 1242 he was deputed a joint Ambassador for denouncing war again the French king, and soon after appointed Seneschal of Gascony. In 1244 “he gave the overthrow of battle to the King of Navarre,” obtaining a signal victory, for which and other services Henry III gave him the Manor of Kings-Carswell and others in Devon (subsequently descending to Dinham) and he was afterwards appointed Constable of Dover Castle, and Warden of the Cinque Ports. He married Hawise, daughter and co-heir of James de Newmarch of North Cadbury, and in her right possessed that Manor and Saperton. He was succeeded by his son Roger.

II. Roger de Moels, married Alice, daughter of William de Preux, and was of North Cadbury. He served in the Welsh Wars and had the Castle of Lampadervaur committed to his custody, died in 1294, and was succeeded by his son John.

III. John de Moels, he married a daughter of Lord Grey de Ruthyn, and distinguished himself, temp. Edward I, in the Scottish Wars. He was summoned to Parliament as a BARON from 6 Feb., 1299—27 Edward I—to 16 June, 1311. Speaking of this Baron, Risdon (in his Survey, 1630) narrates:—

“Of this tribe was John, Lord Mules, one of the ninety-four barons that in a Parliament holden at Lincoln, in the reign of King Edward I, anno 1301, subscribed a letter denying the Pope’s pretended title to the Kingdom of Scotland.”

He died in 1311, leaving a son Nicholas; also apparently a daughter Johanna, married to Sir Henry de la Pomeroy, (ob: 22 Oct. 1367,) of Stokeley, Berye, &c., in south Devon, as his first wife.

IV. Nicholas de Moels,—styled second Baron, but never summoned,—he married Margaret, fourth daughter of Hugh Courtenay, Baron of Okehampton, ob: 1328, by his wife Eleanor, daughter of Hugh De Spencer, Earl of Winchester, by whom he had two sons, Roger, his successor, and John who succeeded his brother.

Lady Margaret Moels, was sister to Hugh, first Earl of Devon, and great-aunt to Sir Peter Courtenay who married Margaret Clyvedon of Aller. He (Nicholas) died in 1316, and was succeeded by his elder son Roger.

V. Roger de Moels,—styled third Baron, but never summoned,—he died 19 Edward II, 1326, sine prole, and was succeeded by his brother John.

VI. John de Moels,—styled fourth (and last) Baron, but never summoned. He was created Knight of the Bath, 20 Edward II, 1327, and in the expedition to Scotland by Edward III in 1334.

He married Joan, daughter of Richard, Lord Lovel, of Castle Cary, (summoned as a Baron from 20 Nov. 1348, to 25 Nov. 1350,) by his wife Muriel, daughter of his guardian John Soulis of Old Rokesburgh (Burke says—she was the daughter of William first Earl of Douglas in Scotland) and who died in 1351. Arms of Lovel of Cary:—Or, semée of crosses-crosslet a lion rampant azure.

By her John de Moels had two daughters, Muriel and Isabel, coheireses. He died about 1337.

VII. Muriel de Moels,—she married her cousin Sir Thomas Courtenay—ob: 1357, styled of South-Pool and Wotton in Devon, fourth son of Hugh, second Earl of Devon, ob: 1340, by Agnes St. John. Cleaveland states:—

“He was put in commission with his brother Hugh, Earl of Devon, to lead the Devonshire and Cornish men against the French, who landed in the west, and they bravely beat off the French, and made them return to their own country, he did likewise serve King Edward III, in the wars against Great Britain.”

They had three children,—Hugh, ob: 1369, sine prole, Margaret, married to Sir Thomas Peverell, whose daughter Katherine married Sir Walter Hungerford, K.G. of Farleigh, ob: 1449, summoned as Baron 1426-48, and were both buried in Salisbury Cathedral;—Muriel married Sir John Dinham, who succeeded to the Manors of Kings-Carswell, &c., in Devon, and Stoke-Moels in Oxfordshire. The Dinhams were also connected with Somerset; at Buckland-Dinham, they founded a Chantry in the church, and within it there still remains a gravestone to them, of early date, with busts and shields, greatly denuded; and at Corton-Dinham.

In South-Pool church is an antient effigy in the transept of a lady clad in long gown and robe over, with very large cushion-shaped head-dress, richly embroidered, with cover-chief,—that may probably represent this Muriel de Moels-Courtenay, the costume being of contemporary date.

VIII. Isabel de Moels,—she married Sir William Botreaux, and inherited the Manor of North Cadbury, and Dappleford in Devon; this match will be further referred to. At the death of John de Moels about 1337, the presumed barony fell into abeyance between these two daughters.

The arms of Moels, Argent, two bars and in chief three roundels gules, are exactly similar to the bearings of Hungerford, whose tinctures differ by the charge being sable and argent. The crest of Mules is given as a Mule passant.

A junior branch of Moels was settled at Ernesborough, in Swimbridge, north Devon, which, continues Risdon—

“As the name imports is a principal place or court house in the lord's manor, and so this seems by the ruins yet remaining. It became the seat of the Flavels whose inheritrix brought this heritage with a goodly patrimony to Sir Roger Mules, second son of the Lord Mules, baron of Cadbury in Somersetshire. The north aisle of the church was built by Sir John Mules of Ernesborough, as the inscription in a window, and a proof there once fairly painted and gilded, with the arms and matches of that family make evident, unto the maintenance whereof for ever he gave to that church his lands called Furse.”

The Chantry, dedicated to St. Bridget, is entered from the north aisle by a good arch, and on the bosses of the roof are shields,—Mules, impaling Battin,—Calmady, Dabernon, &c., and the date 1729, when these armories were probably restored, and the tinctures apparently incorrectly blazoned.

A branch from this house migrated to Halmeston in the neighbouring parish of Bishops-Tawton; of which place he further notes:—

“in Edward III time, Baldwin Ackland was invested, which descended to Joan his heir, married to Thomas Mules, second son of Thomas Mules of Ernesborough in Henry V time (1413-22) and so lineally after six descents to John Mules the late lord thereof, who married the daughter of Chafe, his father the heir of Yeomans of Northamptonshire,—his only daughter and heir, married to Bennet.”

This John Mules appears to have been the last male descendant of this branch of the family of whom Westcote (1630) observes,—

“the name is continued in this gentleman, John Moelis of Yalmston, whose company and assistance in this our journey would be very delightful and profitable unto us, for his many good parts.”

A monument in the church commemorates him thus inscribed:—

Erected to admonish the living of their end, and to reserve his memory who is not dead but sleepeth, JOHN MULYS of HALMESTON, ESQ., lineally descended from that worthy family of his name, Barons of North Cadbury in Somerset, whence a branch transplanted to Ernishborough in Swimbridge, continued on the descende to him who here lay down to rest the 12th September, 1633.

Arms,—Quarterly of six,—1. Mules, with crescent for difference, 2. Ermine, on a bend gules, three escallops argent,—3. Barry of nine argent and gules, a canton sable;—4. Fretty argent and azure, a chief ermine,—5. Mules,—6. Azure, six fusils in fess, and a canton argent, a crescent for difference, (CHAFE). Four other shields,—1. Mules, impaling, Ermine, on a bend gules, three escallops argent (PERROT?)—2. Mules, impaling, Azure, three battle axes or, (BATTIN) 3. Mules, impaling, Sable a chevron between three escallops argent, (DYER) 4. Chequy argent and sable, a chief of the first, (ACLAND) impaling Mules.

Apparently this is the only memorial existent to the “ancient and noble race” of Moels.

In alliance with the heiress of North-Cadbury, Isabel de Moels, we reach the equally antient family of Botreaux. Their original home was at Botreaux Castle, on the north coast of Cornwall, and subsequently also in Devon at Molland-Botreaux, where, according to Pole, "they had their dwelling in this country from Henry I tyme (1100-25) unto Henry VI tyme (1422-61) that the name fell into the famyly of Hungerford." There were seven descendants, of whom five were named William and two Reginald, and these bring us to their four successors, each named William, of North-Cadbury, with the first of whom our account begins.

I. William de Botreaux,—he was thirty years old at his father's death, and married Isabel, daughter and coheir of Sir John de Moels, K.B., styled fourth (and last) Baron, by his wife Joan, daughter of Richard, Lord Lovell of Castle-Cary. She was married in 1337,, and at the decease of her father inherited the manor of North-Cadbury, &c.; and was joint heiress to the Barony. She died 19 July, 1349, her husband surviving her three days only, dying 22 July, 1349;—they left a son William.

II. William de Botreaux, aged twelve at his father's death,—he was in the expedition to Saxony, Portugal and Spain, and was summoned to Parliament as a BARON, from 24 Feb. 1367, to 12 Sept. 1390. He was born 13 Sep. 1337, and married 6 Feb. 1369-70, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Ralph Daubeney, of South Petherton, Knt., by Katherine daughter of William Lord Thwenge, and died 10 Aug, 1391. His wife, Lady Elizabeth Botreaux, appears to have survived him more than forty years, and Collinson relates,—

"She rebuilt the parish church of North-Cadbury, and in 1427, procured license from Henry VI to erect and transfer the said foundation into a Collegiate Church, and to establish a Perpetual College of seven Chaplains, one of them to preside and have the government thereof, and to be called Rector of the College of St. Michael the Archangel of North Cadbury, and four Clerks to pray for the good estate of the King, and of her the said Elizabeth, and Sir William Botreaux the younger, Knt."

She died in 1433, and there appears to have been four sons, William, the heir, Thomas, Ralph and John, on all of whom the manor was entailed successively.

III. William de Botreaux, second Baron, aged twenty four at his father's death. He married Elizabeth Clyvedon-St. Loe, of Aller, previously described, She died 14 Sep. 1389, her husband 25 May, 1395;—they left a son William.

IV. William de Botreaux, third and last Baron, was summoned to Parliament from 1 Dec. 1412 to 23 May, 1461. He was born 20 Feb. 1389-90, and married first before 1415, Elizabeth, daughter of John, Lord Beaumont, by whom he had two sons, William and Reginald, and two daughters, Anne, and Margaret eventually their sole heiress. Anne married Sir John Stafford, Knt, (ob: 5 Nov. 1427) second son of Sir Humphrey Stafford "of the Silver Hand," (ob: 1442) the marriage contract dated 16 March, 1426, the event "to take place before the Feast of Whitsunday next ensuing"; by him she had one son Humphrey, who died in Scotland 6 Aug. 1461, s.p. Elizabeth Beaumont, Lady Botreaux, died before 37 Henry VI, 1459. Secondly, he married Margaret, daughter of Thomas, Lord Roos, and she remarried before 1464 Sir Thomas Burgh, Knt. He, Lord Botreaux, died 16 May 1462, and is said to have made his will in 1415, forty-seven years before his death, when he was about to accompany Henry V to France. He directs his burial to be in North-Cadbury church, and died seized of fifty manors in the western counties, the administration dated 1 July, 1462.

The presumed tomb, with the effigies of Lord William Botreaux and Elizabeth Beaumont his first wife, now occupies a corner of the tower of North-Cadbury church. but its original position was in the Founder's place on the north side of the chancel. He is in complete plate armour, his head on a helmet, with the remains of a crest, apparently a griffin, the cognizance of the family, his feet on a lion. The lady has a richly ornamented mitre head-dress, necklace, and clad in long robes. Two angels support her shoulders, and her feet rest on two dogs, one collared. Above their heads are the remains of a canopy.

V. William de Botreaux, eldest son, predeceased his father, and died before 1434, s.p.

VI. Reginald de Botreaux, second son, also died before his father in 1420,—s. p. The memorial to this son is in Aller church, the principal family manor descending on his grandmother's side. Originally a flat stone in the pavement, it is now set upright in the chancel and is considerably denuded. The shield is in low relief, and the letters of the inscription are incised in a ledger line,—it records:—

Hic jacet Roginaldus filius William dom' de Botreaux qui obiit xxx die mensis Julii anno dom' M^occccxx.

Arms,—A griffin rampant, (BOTREAUX) impaling—Semée fleurs de lys, a lion rampant, (BEAUMONT.)

VII. Margaret de Botreaux,—sole surviving daughter and heiress. She was aged forty at her father's death, and had married Sir Robert Hungerford, Knt., second Baron, and brought to her husband a vast estate, in Somerset, Cornwall and Devon, that descended to her by Clyvedon, Moels and Botreaux, being also joint heiress to the barony of Moels, and sole heiress to that of Botreaux.

Notwithstanding her great possessions and noble espousal, the life of Margaret Botreaux was a succession of great vicissitude and trial, but she was a most energetic wife, and a much-tried, devoted mother. Her son, Sir Robert, having been taken prisoner after the unfortunate battle of Chastillon, she advanced immense sums to procure his freedom, which was only effected after an incarceration of seven years and four months. But she was destined subsequently to experience a similar but far greater trial that resulted in the loss of this son, for whom she had suffered and spent so much, perishing by the executioner's hand, he being again taken prisoner, this time at home, fighting on the Lancastrian side at Hexham, and being conveyed to Newcastle, there beheaded by the victorious Yorkists, in 1463. Six years afterward, she lived to experience further the death of her grandson Sir Thomas Hungerford, awarded the same dreadful fate at Salisbury in 1469. She was mulcted of large sums during her widowhood "for the composition of the lands of her late husband, divers times seized and given to several great lords," and also in "the loss she sustained when she was put into the Abbey of Ambresbury at the King's command, her moveable goods of great value being there burnt,"—yet notwithstanding these amercements, she faithfully carried out her husband's intentions in founding and endowing the Chantry in Salisbury Cathedral, and buried him there in a tomb of marble with his effigies, and erecting another destined for herself; together with the Almshouse at Heytesbury, which still exists; in all at almost fabulous cost.

Robert, Lord Hungerford, her husband, died in 1459, and she was released from her troublous life 7 Feb. 1478-9. But misfortunes did not cease at her death; they were both buried in the Chantry this devoted woman had erected, and which Wyatt subsequently ruthlessly demolished. Her tomb,—described by Hutchins "as an altar tomb, the cover-stone being a good imitation of a pall with a cross on it,"—was completely destroyed, no identified trace remaining. The effigy of her husband was preserved, and it now reclines on a patched-up tomb in the nave. It is of alabaster, clad in enriched fluted plate armour, throat-piece and gussets of chain-mail, ornamented baudric with anelace. The hair polled, collar of S.S., feet on a dog collared, and held by a leash.

But a characteristic remembrance of this remarkable lady remains in her seal, where she is represented as sitting in laced bodice and coverchief, with an open book on her lap, and around her a label inscribed "Myne trouth assured," on the dexter side a lion statant supporting a banner over her head bearing the arms of Hungerford impaling Botreaux, on the sinister a griffin statant, (the badge of Botreaux) with a banner charged with the arms of Botreaux impaling Beaumont, for her mother. The inscription, "Sigillum Margarete d'ne de Hungerford et de Botreaux."*

* The illustration of her seal is taken from Canon Jackson's Farleigh Hungerford, with all acknowledgement and obligation.

It is also given in Sir R. C. Hoare's Modern Wilts. The effigies at North Cadbury, from the drawing by Mr. Roscoe Gibbs. The outline from the Aller Gravestone by the author.

The arms of Botreaux were originally, Argent, three toads erect sable, and subsequently, Argent, a griffin rampant gules, armed and membered azure.

In his description of the parish of Minster, north Cornwall, in which Botreaux Castle the original home of Botreaux was situate, Lysons records,—

“The manor, honour, and borough of Botreaux Castle, (now called Boscastle) were among the antient possessions of the baronial family of Botreaux, who were settled here as early as the reign of Henry II, (1154-89). William Botreaux and his younger brother Reginald were both among the rebel barons in arms against Henry III. William Lord Botreaux, the last of the family, was killed at the battle of St. Albans in 1462, (second battle) leaving an only daughter married to Sir Robert Hungerford. The principal residence of this antient family was at the Castle called after their name, of which only the mount remains. Leland speaks of the manor place as a thing of small reputation “far unworthie the name of a castel, the people there call it the court.” Carew says “the diversified rooms of a prison in the castle, for both sexes, better preserved by the inhabitants memorie than discernible by their own endurance, show the same heretofore to have exercised some large jurisdiction.” The manor-house,—now in a state of dilapidation,—and manors, passed with the heiress of Hungerford to Hastings. Henry Hastings, Earl of Huntingdon, temp: Queen Elizabeth, sold the manor and lordship to John Hender, Esq.”

Risdon (1630) speaking of Molland-Botreaux, their possession in Devon, says,— “Botreaux Park was the antient dwelling of Botreaux in Devon, from the Conquest to the reign of Henry VI, at which time John Botreaux, a younger son of William, Lord Botreaux, Captain of Charenton in Normandy, temp: Henry V, enjoyed this land, who fighting valiantly at St. Albans was slain by the Duke of York, 23 May, 33 Henry VI, (1455, the first battle). Willam, first of this name, I find was in great favour with Henry I, (1100-35) and married Alice, daughter of Robert Corbett, sister of Amasia, by whom that King had Reginald, Earl of Cornwall.”

The interesting old Cornish tradition of the wreck of the vessel bearing a peal of bells to Botreaux, and whose notes are said to be still occasionally heard from the ocean depths, has been made famous by the poet-parson of Morwenstow, who in “The Silent Tower of Botreaux,” pleasantly recounts the legend concluding,—

“Still when the storm of Bottreau’s waves,
Is wakening in his weedy caves,
Those bells, that sullen surges hide
Peal their deep notes beneath the tide :—
“Come to thy God in time !”
Thus saith the ocean chime ;
Storm, billow, whirlwind past
“Come to thy God at last !”

E. MARGARET THOMPSON.

169. LANGPORT CHURCH HERALDRY. (VI. xlv. 101.)—In the March number Mr. F. Were contributed some notes on this subject, and asked for a personal examination thereof. Having done this I beg to offer some further suggestions on the arms and family of Heyron.

The two shields illustrated above are still in Langport Church, the single coat being found in the windows of the chancel, and also carved on a corbel in the Heyron chapel; the impaled coat is found only in the latter position.

As the tinctures of the Heyron coat are sable and argent, they are reproduced in the illustration. Collinson (iii. 133) read them: Per fesse arg. and sa. a pale counterchanged, 3 herons' heads of the first. Mr. Buckle, Som. Arc. Proc. XL. ii. 75, note; Party of six sa. and arg. 3 herons' heads erased counterchanged. Mr. Paul, op. cit. 67, Per fesse sa. and arg. a pale counterchanged, 3 herons' heads of the second; this last blazon being the correct one.

The charges on the impaled shield are very doubtful. Perhaps they are mallets; this coat with divers tinctures was borne by many families, v. Papworth.

In the east window of the chancel is a beautiful representation of a heron on a red background; which is no doubt the coat described by Collinson as being in the south window of the the Heron chapel: on a roundle gu. a hennshaw arg. This would be the badge or crest of the Heyron family.

So much for the heraldry; now for the family.

Mr. Paul in his account of the Church of Langport Eastover (op. cit. of Proceedings, XL. ii. 64) tried without any apparent cause to prove that the present south transept was never the Heyron chapel; nor the arms, described above, those of Heyron, but of Rosse.

First of all, Dr. Norris' note in iv. p. 275 proves that John Heyron was described as of Langport in 1485; there can be no doubt that in Mr. Paul's own words "the present chancel, north transept and south transept were evidently all built at the same time and under the same architect"; that this was done shortly before the death of John Heyron, sen., is shown by his will dated 8 Aug., 1499, and proved 26 Sept., 1500 (Heyron Chantry by Rev. F. W. Weaver op. cit. of Proceedings, XL. ii. 70) in which he gives his body to be buried in the new Ile of Langport at the awter end. This new Ile became the site of the Heyron chantry, and John Heyron, jun., in his will 20th June, 1507, desires to be buried in "my own chapel," though the chantry had not yet been founded. Gerard in his survey of Somerset, made c. 1630, says "At this Lamport lived one Herne surveyor to King Henry the Eight (seventh) whose benevolence to the church deserves to be remembered for it seems he new built the most part of it seeing his armes of party per fess arg. (sa.) and sab. (arg.) a pale counter-changed three herons' heads erased of the first (second), are seen on almost all the pillars there, and in it he lies intombed and left two daughters his heires Married to Sydenham of Chelworthy in his wives right and Rose ancestor to those of Shepton who to this day give his arms."

Gerard's account is not free from inaccuracies, and he seems to have overlooked John Heyron, jun. The rest of his information is new and of great interest. There are no shields on the pillars now; being probably supported by angels (as the Montacute arms are at Stoke S. Gregory) they have been knocked off, or perhaps Gerard meant the corbels supporting the wall pieces in the south transept.

Gerard's note of 'Hernes' profession throws a significant light on that clause in his will wherein he desires the priest of his chantry to pray inter alios 'for all the souls that I have taken any goods wrongfully of,' and also on the paternal malediction if the son did not provide for the priest. When Empson and Dudley were chief surveyors, the underlings must have had much on their consciences.

In addition to their wills, the Inquisitions post mortem of father and son are extant. The family property was situated in Chelworthy, Combe S. Nicholas, Hilcombe, Pysemershe, Illeggh, Buckland S. Mary, Doniet, Bulforde, Schepton Becheham, Edyngworth, Muddesley in Wedmore, Mark or East Brent, Meryet, Wyke, Langport Eastover and Westover, Southwike, Curry Malet, Fivehead, Swelle, North Petherton, Nuten Pleycey.

On the death of John Heyron sen., his son aged 21 years and more succeeded. He died in 1507 leaving a widow Elizabeth and four daughters, Agnes aged fourteen, Dorothy aged twelve, Isabelle aged ten, and Margaret aged seven. I have more than a suspicion that Elizabeth Heyron remarried Sir John Choke, of Long Ashton, for in a Ped. Fin. levied Trinity term 5 Hen. VIII (1513) Sir John Choke and Elizabeth his wife were declared owners of property in all these widely scattered places with the exception of the last five. As Sir John had sold Long Ashton in 1506 he would be in want of a home at this period. He left no children, and in the Visitation of 1623 his wife's name is not mentioned. Gerard says that only two daughters were married, but he does not mention their Christian names, and as yet I have not been able to find them. In the Visitation of 1623 there is a pedigree (p. 99, 100) of Sydenham of Chelworthy beginning with John, grandson of John Sidenham, of Brympton, ob. 1460, and Joan Stourton, ob. 1472, who married the d. and h. of Herne. He was succeeded by George who married Mary Warr of Hestercomb, and left a large family. The eldest son Humphrey was 9 years old in 1623. According to Collinson (iii, 522) he must have left only daughters, for 'Anne one of the daughters and co-heirs of Sir Humphrey S. of Chelworthy married Roger Sydenham of Leigh in the parish of Skilgate.' Collinson does not mention Chelworthy in the account of Ilminster, and the Register only dates from 1660.

As regards the Rose or rather Rosse connexion, if it was not for Gerard's notes, we could not have asserted it, because the pedigree of Rosse in the Visitation 1623 does not give any alliance with Herne. As the first person in the pedigree, Cuthbert 'who came out of Yorkshire into Som.' is the only one of the ancestors whose wife is not given by their descendant James Rosse of Shepton Beauchamp and Somerton, we must suppose that he married another of Heyron's daughters. As Gerard states, their arms are the same as those of Heron and I found a confirmation of this in examining the Communion plate of Somerton. Among the pieces is a paten formed out of a plate of silver turned up at the edge. This plate is mounted on a bird's claw of silver instead of the usual cylindrical foot. On the plate are the arms of Rosse as above and the initials M. R. There are no hall-marks, but other patens in this country of a provincial or local make are generally of the latter part of the seventeenth cent., so the plate may be assigned to this period and the initials may be those of Mary Rosse the youngest daughter of James, of Shepton B. and Somerton.

There is some evidence to show that one other daughter of John Heyron at least was married, for in the pedigree of Hackshaw, of Hinton S. George, Visit. 1623, William H. of Hayne, co. Somerset, is said to have married a daughter of Heron at the same interval of generations as in the case of Sydenham, which was one less than that of Rosse. The arms of Hackshaw are given as 'a cheveron btw. three peacocks' heads erased,' but in Burke's Armory of 1842 the only family of that name (of Sutton co. Salop) bear Or, a chevron betw. three herons' heads erased gu. Crest, a heron's head ar. gorged with a ducal coronet gules. This bears a very near resemblance to the arms of Heron.

Collinson in his account of Cricket Malerbe (i. 22) says that John Dynham, aged seventeen at the date of his father's death, 1519, married Johanna, daughter of John Heron, knt. The young man would certainly have been a contemporary of the family of John Heyron, jun., but there is no Johanna among the daughters. She might have been a posthumous child. No authority is given for Collinson's statement.

It now remains for some enquirer to sort out the daughters of John Heyron among their respective husbands. E. H. BATES.

170. WITHAM—DATE OF FOUNDATION OF:—In a review of H. Thurston's Life of S. Hugh of Lincoln, S. & D. N. & Q., VI. pt. xliii., No. 67, it was pointed out that, since the date of the foundation must be placed between 1176 and 1181, the Pipe Rolls for that period should be searched to supply the exact date. This has now been done, and the earliest entry relating to the Carthusians in England will be found in the Roll of 26 Hen. II., 25 Oct., 1179—25 Oct., 1180.

"Fratribus de Ordine de Chartusa residentibus in villa de Witham quam Willielmus filius Johannis habuit, X libras blancas in eadem villa per breve Regis."

Thus by the simple expedient of examining primary evidence, the question which had baffled so many writers, historical, archæological, picturesque and controversial, has been set at rest. This date exactly tallies with that of the entry in the Norman Exchequer Rolls, 1180, concerning the costs of the passage of the Carthusians into England. If we could suppose the new-comers to have arrived late in the autumn of 1179, there would be plenty of time for two Priors to have retired before S. Hugh arrived on the scene in 1180 or 1181.

171. WILLIAM DYER, A SOMERSET ROYALIST IN NEW ENGLAND. Continued. (VI. xlv. 152.)—My narrative (1) left William Dyer resolved to emigrate by way of rescuing himself and his wife and son from the intolerable position made for them in the Massachusetts Bay Colony. This was late in 1637. For similar reasons, Roger Williams had already planted Providence at the head of Narragansett Bay. South-eastward of Providence, between the "West Passage" and the "East Passage," lies a group of islands in the narrows or "roads" commanding the entrances of the Bay. The largest of these, called by the Narragansetts "Aquidneck," is the "Island of the Straits" par excellence. Thence, after it was colonized, the name Rhode Island seems to have invented itself (2) to take the place of the more outlandish Aquidneck. This island and those adjoining were purchased of the Narragansetts by William Coddington and his friends early in 1637, and thither went William Dyer in Coddington's company,—all of them more or less definitely outlawed by the oligarchical theocracy which governed Massachusetts so sternly, and exercised a sort of theological suzerainty over the elder colony at Plymouth.

This "outcast people, formerly from our mother nations,"—England, Scotland and Wales are apparently meant,—"in the Bishops daies, and since from the rest of the new English over zealous Colonys" (3) numbered about 50 men. They landed near the north-eastern end of Aquidneck Island, and nineteen of their number, acting for the whole body, signed a compact "in the presence of Jehovah" incorporating themselves into a "Body Politick." Of this Body Politick William Coddington was named judge, and William Dyer clerk. This happened on March 17, 1638. In a short time the wiser heads among the Colonists discovered, apparently, that this first place of settlement was ill-chosen; moreover an eccentric person, Samuel Gorton, from Lancashire, seems to have turned the heads of the more illiterate settlers. At all events the whole constituted government of the incipient town, which had been named Portsmouth, met together on April 28th, 1639, and signed a new compact "to propagate a plantation in the midst of the island or elsewhere," and to "bear equal charge answerable to our estates in common." William Dyer signed this as clerk and Coddington as judge, there were seven other signatures. Two days later, on April 30th, those who chose to stay behind at Portsmouth with Samuel Gorton, 28 in all, signed or affixed their marks to a third compact acknowledging themselves "the legal subjects of his Majesty King Charles" and "in his name" binding themselves into a "civil body politick. unto his laws according to matters of justice." Among the 29 who signed this embryo constitution, sixteen were unable to write their own names. Plainly the nine who signed the agreement to settle elsewhere were the picked and intelligent men of the community. One other West of England man among these besides William Dyer was Nicholas Easton of Lymington, Hampshire, and it is therefore not an accident that the first settlement was called Portsmouth, and the second took its name from near by,—Newport in the Isle of Wight. Indeed the gradually accepted name of Rhode Island may be connected with the currency in the West of England of "road" in the sense exemplified by "Cowes Road" off Portsmouth.(1) The New England Newport which these picked colonists finally chose to plant is the one pre-eminently desirable harbour in the whole of Aquidneck Island. The Settlement there was made in the course of the summer of 1639, and as the intending settlers sailed southward along the west coast of Aquidneck, they passed a small island not far from the entrance to Newport Harbour and "William Dyer desiring a spot of land of us as we passed by it, we did grant him our right in the said island and named it Dyer's Island." (2) This islet still bears its original name.

A very turbulent member of the new colony at Newport was Randall Holden of Salisbury, but he managed to make his peace with the self-constituted authorities, thereby devoting himself to planting a settlement on the mainland, south of Roger Williams Providence Plantation. He named the new town where settlement was begun in January, 1643, Warwick, not without obvious reference to negotiations then in progress for a regular charter to be given by Charles I., through Earl Warwick, then the Lord High Admiral. Roger Williams had been sent to England from Providence in 1642 for the especial purpose of getting a charter, which he duly obtained on March 17, 1643. Lord Warwick's charter,—a copy of which is recorded among the Colonial papers under date of March 14, 1644 (3),—is addressed to the inhabitants of "the towns of Providence, Portsmouth and Newport."

(1) My friend, Dr. Wright, Editor of the English Dialect Dictionary informs me that the use of 'Road,' in the sense of a safe refuge for ships, has never been local in England, but belongs to the language in all parts.

(2) See William Coddington's deposition dated Oct. 18th, 1669. Confirmed by the concurrent testimony of Randall Holden from Salisbury, Wilts. Here is, then, another Wessex man to be counted among the original planters of Newport, although he was not one of the nine who signed the compact to settle at Newport.

(3) See Colonial papers 1574-1660.

It grants them "a free and absolute Charter of incorporation to be known by the name of Providence Plantation in the Narragansett Bay in New England," and reserves the right to dispose of the general government "as it stands in reference to the rest of the plantations in America." How very vague were the grantors' notions as to this last reservation, and as to the relations between the New England Colonies is shown by another grant made by them on Dec. 10, 1643, which conveyed the whole mainland of the Narragansett Bay,—covering Providence and also Warwick, to the governor and assistants of Massachusetts Bay Colony, "with reservation of all lands heretofore granted and possessed by the Kings Protestant subjects." Under this last grant, the men of Massachusetts nearly broke up Randall Holden's new settlement at Warwick, and imprisoned Holden himself at Boston for a time. He was finally released, and a loose conglomeration of all plantations in the Narragansett Bay country, including Warwick as well as the three towns named in Lord Warwick's first charter,—Providence, Portsmouth and Newport,—was organized under that Charter in 1647 (1).

But Coddington was not satisfied by any such arrangement. He was a man of great ambition and wished to be at the head of an absolutely independent government on Aquidneck island. He accordingly went to England in 1649, and obtained a Commission as Governor of Rhode island which superseded the charter of Lord Warwick so far as Portsmouth and Newport were concerned. Indignation against him ran very high among the Narragansett colonists, since this move of his frustrated their long-cherished hope of cementing such union among themselves as should secure them against the intense illwill and overt attacks of the "new English over-zealous colonies." Also Coddington was known to be in constant correspondence with Massachusetts, where the men of Portsmouth and Newport were still outlawed. Furthermore Coddington had been high-handed and grasping in the matter of the distribution of lands when the colony at Newport took shape.

The brunt of resistance to Coddington's encroachments in the matter of land fell upon William Dyer, whose life was embittered by contentions with this wealthy, energetic and powerfully connected East Anglian. For Coddington came from Boston in Lincolnshire, and may count as an East Anglian. The gist of the matters in constant controversy is set forth by an indignant remonstrance which William Dyer made in writing against encroachments by Coddington upon the regularly established high-ways of Newport. This declaration was made on February 15th, 1654, but the encroachments go back to 1639, when William

(1) See Colonial papers 1574-1660.

Dyer was appointed to apportion lands,—a duty which he attended to more zealously than others who shared it with him.

Thus, when Coddington “went for England” in 1649, and returned triumphant with his Commission, William Dyer and he had been repeatedly at law, and it was only natural that the indignant colonists should select Dyer as their agent to join the agent of Providence, John Clarke, in going to England to secure the abrogation of Coddington’s Commission. In the details of a lawsuit pending between these two enemies at the time when William Dyer went to England (1651) nothing is more noticeable than the bias of all Newport men against Coddington and in Dyer’s favour.

In 1653 Dyer returned with letters from the Council of State annulling Coddington’s Commission, and was appointed Commander-in-Chief on the sea against the Dutch. Gradually the consolidation of the Narragansett colonies was achieved, and the whole situation, politically speaking, was simplified by the submission of Coddington, and finally legalized by the Charter granted by Charles II. in 1663 to the Narragansett Bay Settlements as “a body corporate and politique in fact and name, by the name of the Governor (1) and Company of the English Colonie of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations.” This charter was the Constitution of the “State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations” until the year 1842.

transcribed June 1797.

N.B.—The Pencil additions are in the same hand as the portion first written in ink. There is every reason to believe that the whole is the handwriting of Sir William Musgrove.

Observations.—My main object in publishing this catalogue is to call attention to No. 238, a portrait of Edward VI. ascribed to Sir Anthony More, hanging now in the Grand Saloon. I have not seen it, but from the description given to me I think it must be a duplicate or copy of the Holbein Portrait at Petworth, and engraved in Lodge's Portraits. It does not appear to have been known to Mr. J. G. Nichols as it is not noticed in his "Catalogue of the Portraits of Edward VI." (printed for private distribution in 1859), neither was it exhibited among the many portraits of the King at the Tudor Exhibition in 1890.

Although ascribed to Sir Anthony More it could not have been his work if, as Waagen says in his "Art Treasures of England" (III. 429) with reference to another portrait of Edward VI. attributed to More, that he could not have painted him from life since the King died in 1553, and the painter's first visit to England did not occur until after that date. It is quite possible it may have been a memorial picture painted by some unknown artist, but whoever the painter was it is undoubtedly a genuine contemporary work, and we know where it came from. It was a legacy to Sir Hugh Poulett of Hinton—the father of Sir Amias Poulett who was custodian of Mary Queen of Scots—under the will of Mr. Anthony Gilbert, dated March 12th, 1555, (two years after the King's death) and proved by Nicholas Wadham for the Executor in August of the same year. The words of the bequest are "Item I give to Sir Hugh Powlet Kt. the picture of King Edward." Sir Hugh no doubt placed it in an honorable position on the walls of his mansion and here it has 'hung in peace' for upwards of 300 years.

Mr. Gilbert in his will describes himself as "late of East Coker," but he was a member of the ancient and a well connected family of Gilbert which was seated at Whitcombe in the parish of Corton Denham, one of his ancestors, William Gilbert, having been Treasurer of the Household to King Edward III. They bore for their arms—argent a chevron engrailed between three roses gules. It is probable that Mr. Gilbert's life had been spent mostly in London as a Barrister or, as it was called in those days 'Counsellor,' for he bequeaths to his friend John Billings his "Books of the Lawe and other things in my study at London." But Corton was his domicile, and he requests to be buried in the Church of Corton "nere my father Robert Gilbert and Margaret my mother." She was his father's second wife, one of the Bampfields of the adjoining village of Sutton—the first wife was a Wadham. The Testator was married and apparently left no children, but he gave legacies to his nephews Sir Henry Ashley and Anthony Ashley sons of Henry Ashley of Wimborne St. Giles, his sister's husband (see Dorset Visitation 1565). Although a loyal subject of the Protestant King he was evidently not of "the New Religion" himself, as he gives particular direction for the masses to be celebrated at his burial and gives to his cousin John Speeke "the picture of Our Ladye hanging at my bedd's hedd."

178. MANOR OF PRESTON BOWYER, in Milverton Pariſh, Somerſet.—The manor of Preſton Bowyer, (properly Bures from its ancient owners) was given in the reign of Hen. II by Iſabella de Candos and her ſon Robert to the Alien Priory of Goldcliff in Monmouthſhire, and after the ſuppreſſion of Alien Priories was, together with the manor of Monksilver and the churches of Puriton and Wollavynton, granted by Edward IV to the Dean and Canons of St. George's Chapel, Windſor (Dugd. Mon. III, 75).

The conſiſcation and ſale of biſhops' lands by the Long Parliament in 1646 was followed by a ſimilar ſequeſtration of the lands of deans and chapters, and in purſuance of an ordinance of April 1649 Commiſſioners were appointed to ſurvey them in order to their ſale. The document now printed is a copy of the ſurvey of Preſton Bowyer one of the forfeited manors—but whether it was actually ſold does not appear.

On the Reſtoration the ordinances of ſequeſtration were repealed and the eſtates reſtored to their rightful owners—in this caſe the Dean and Canons of Windſor. The Sydenham family were leſſees under them, and this ſurvey was found amongſt the MSS. of Sir Philip Sydenham, who was the leſſee in his time.

DUCHESS OF NORFOLK.

183. MOLYNS-HUNGERFORD, OF FARLEIGH HUNGERFORD, SOMERSET.—“The family of Moleyns,” says Dugdale, “was originally of French extraction, and from that town in the Bourbonois so named, is not at all to be doubted,” of whom the first of any note in England was John de Moleyns, temp. Edward III.

I. JOHN DE MOLYNS,—he married about 1331, EGIDIA, daughter (or cousin) and heiress of John de Mauduit, of Somerford-Mauduit, &c, Wilts, by his wife Margaret, daughter and co-heiress of Robert de Pogeis, of Stoke-Pogeis, Co: Bucks.

His military exploits consisted, in 1332, with William de Montacute surprising in the night time the Castle of Nottingham, and taking Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, prisoner, for which offence he was soon after pardoned; and subsequently he was engaged in the Scotch wars, and in 1339 in the expedition of Flanders.

He was early attached to the Court of Edward III, in 1332, was a Gentleman of the King's Privy Chamber, and in 1339, Treasurer of the Chamber to that King; and for lands granted him in 1337, to hold in capite, by the service of Marshal of the King's Hawks & Falcons. He was also made a Banneret, and in 1353, was “in such esteem with Queen Philippa that she made him Steward of all her lands and lordships, with power to supervise her Castles, and to repair them, in case of need.”

On 18 Feb., 1346-7, he was “summoned to a Council” by writ directed to “John de Molyns. but this summons was clearly not such as to entitle him to an hereditary Barony, though generally spoken of as such, nor were any of his descendants summoned.”

His relationship to the Court, and favourable consideration of King Edward III., appear to have given him great influence in the acquisition of a large number of manors, estates and advowsons in various counties at intervals throughout the whole of his life (fully detailed by Dugdale) with license at different times to embattle his mansion houses at Stoke-Pogeis, Ditton and Weston-Turville, to impark considerable areas of land on his various properties, with grants of fairs, and occasionally, other strangely-sounding to-day antient privileges of “Ingfanthesf, Outfangthesf, Felons' goods, Wayf, Stray, Gallows, and Trial of Malefactors; Court-Leet, Correction of the Assize of Bread & Ale,” and immunities, “to be quit of Pontage, Murage, Pavage, &c.”

Among these grants to him by Edward III., was a charter in 1337-8, giving him the patronage of the adjacent Abbey of Burnham, originally founded by Richard, King of the Romans, about 1265, for Nuns of the Order of St. Augustine. For this concession he endowed the Abbey with his manor of Silveston, Co. Northampton, and other lands, with the condition that a priest was to be found for the altar of St. Katherine in the Abbey, a second for the chantry of St. Thomas the Martyr in the church of Stoke-Pogeis, and a third for the chapel at Ditton, to pray for the souls of himself and his wife Egidia, of Vincent and Isabel de Moleyns his parents, and others, and to distribute afterward on the anniversaries of their deaths, certain doles of money and bread to the poor and needy. On the Abbey seal (the principal device on which was Christ crowning his Spouse the Church) were also, presumably, the arms of this John de Moleyns as second Founder, — Sable on a chief argent, three lozenges gules, and this coat, ascribed to Moleyns, is, or was, to be found among the heraldry at Farleigh-Hungerford.

The date of his death has not been recorded. His wife Egidia survived him and died 4 Edward III., 1368, "seized in fee-tail of the manors of Aston-Bernard and Ilmore, Co. Bucks, held of the King by service of Falconry, and formerly granted to her husband and his heirs." They left a son William.

II. William de Molyns, (styled second Baron) was engaged in the French wars and Knighted. He married Margaret, daughter and heir of Edward Bacoun, and died 4 Richard II, 1381, leaving Richard, his son and heir.

III. Richard de Molyns, (styled third Baron) he married Eleanor, daughter of Henry, Lord Beaumont, and died 8 Richard II, 1385, leaving a son William, then seven years old.

Presumably, so stated by Collins and others, he had also a daughter, Katherine, who married Sir John Howard, created by Richard III. Duke of Norfolk, 28 June, 1483, who was slain at Bosworth, fighting on the side of that monarch 22 August, 1485, and of whom this warning was said to have been affixed to his tent door the night before the battle :—

" Jockey of Norfolk be not too bold,
For Dickon thy master is bought and sold ;"

his body being conveyed to the Priory Church at Thetford, and there buried. A rather strange coincidence occurs here, relative to this Duke and Farleigh-Hungerford. Farleigh Castle, which had been forfeited with the other estates after the attainder of Sir Thomas Hungerford in 1469, Edward IV gave to his brother Richard, and when he became king he transferred it in 1483, to this John Howard, Duke of Norfolk, who on his death at Bosworth two years afterward, was attainted, when its possession reverted to the Crown and Henry VII. restored it to the Hungerfords.

But there is some obscurity as to the Duchess being the daughter of *Richard Molyns, and the probability is, she was the daughter of his son William ob. 1424, with which a comparison of dates would more nearly coincide. She was the Duke's first wife, and by him had five children,—Thomas, his son and heir, Anne, married to Sir Edmond Gorges, whose son Sir Edmond was of Wraxhall, Somerset, Isabel, to Sir Robert Mortimer of Essex, Knt., Jane, to Sir John Timperley, Knt., Margaret, to Sir John Wyndham, Knt., of Crowthorpe, Norfolk, ancestor of the Wyndhams of Somerset. She died in 1452, and is buried in the chancel of the church of the Blessed Virgin Mary, at Stoke-by-Nayland in Suffolk. Her brass, which has probably been moved from a position in the main chancel, now occupies the south corner of the south or Windsor aisle of the chancel, and is inserted in a slab of granite eight feet long, which has been broken and repaired. The costume of the figure is of much later date than that of her death, being apparently about 1500-25; and it was probably laid down by her son who was restored to the Dukedom in 1513, died at Framlingham 21 May, 1524, and ordered his body to be buried in the Priory Church at Thetford; and the fine monument with effigies in Framlingham church, is considered to represent him and his wife, and to have been moved there from Thetford at the Dissolution (Beattie).

She wears a pedimental head-dress, a cote-hardie edged with ermine, and sleeved gown with fur cuffs. Over this is a mantle of estate, having embroidered on the right side the arms of Brotherton, Howard and Mowbray (?) and on the left those of Molyns. The inscription was on a square panel under her feet and has disappeared. There were four shields at the corners of the stone, of which only one remains,—of the other three as noted and illustrated by Weever, one was Howard and quarterings encircled by the Garter, another Howard with five quarterings impaling Molyns, and the third Molyns alone†. Weever has also preserved the following inscription:—

Under this Stone is buried the body of the right honorable woman and Ladie, sometime wife unto the right high and mighty Prince, Lord

† A curious circumstance connected with this brass is, that the crosses-crosslet of Howard on the lady's mantle, appear to have been defaced—"delete,"—ploughed out by a graver, and those on the shield nearly obliterated also, both being restored in the illustration from the faint indications visible. Is this apparent defacement significant of the troubles that befel the Howards during the latter part of the reign of Henry VIII, and his daughter Queen Elizabeth? After the barbarous execution of the aged Countess of Salisbury,—the last of the Plantagenets,—by Henry VIII in 1541, orders were given to "render delete" all armorial bearings, &c., found in the beautiful Chantry she had built in the Priory Church, at Christchurch, Hants, which wretchedly vindictive proceeding was carried out, as may now be observed. Pertinent and interesting to our little history it may be mentioned, this ill-fated Countess Margaret Plantagenet was born at Farleigh Castle, 14 Aug., 1473, and the circumstances were these. After the attainder of Sir Thomas Hungerford, in 1469, to be subsequently noticed, Edward IV. gave it to his brother Richard, Duke of Gloucester, the

John Howard, Duke of Norfolk, and mother unto the right noble and puissant Prince, Lord Thomas Howard, Duke also of Norfolk. Which Lady departed this present life, Ann' Dom' 1452.

IV. William de Molyns, (styled fourth Baron) he was knighted and married Margaret (Whalesborough ?) died 3. Henry VI, 8 June 1425, aged 47, leaving a son William, then nineteen years of age.

They were both buried, or intended to be, in the church of Stoke-Pogeis, on the north side of the altar, under a flat stone, whereon are their brass effigies and inscription. The Knight is clad in the full plate armour of the period, armed with sword and misericorde, his feet on a lion. The Lady is habited as a widow, in long robes, barbe, and coverchief. Below the figures is this inscription :—

Hic jacet Will'ms Molyns, Miles, qui obiit viij die Mens' Junii Ao d'ni MCCCCXXV,—Et d'na Marg'ria ux' ei' qo'r' a'ib's p'piciet' de' amen.

Arms, over the knight, (Or) Three piles wavy (gules) (MOLYNS, antient) over the lady Molyns, impaling, (Argent) Three bends (gules) within a bordure (sable) bezantée, (WHALESBOROUGH.)

By this it would appear that his wife was Margaret presumably the daughter of John Whalesborough, of Whalesborough in Marham-Church near Stratton in Cornwall, by his wife Joan, daughter and heir of John Raleigh of Nettlecombe, Somerset. He held at his death the manor of Bampton and four others, Co. Oxon,—Stoke-Pogeis and eight others Co. Bucks,—and Somerford, La Lee, and six others Co. Wilts.

As to the burial of his widow, a difficulty arises. From a Register of Sepulchral Inscriptions, existing temp. Henry VIII, in the Church of the Grey Friars, London, the following then found in the Chapel of St. Francis in that edifice, is included.*

“ ven'l d'na, d'na Anna Molens, ux'r d'ni Will'mi, d'ni de Molens, et filia Joh's Whalysburgh, armig'. de Com Cornubie ob. 1 March 1487.”

Are these for the same person, the scribe having mistaken Anna for Marg'ria? The Stoke-Pogeis inscription does not give a date; the lady, habited as a widow, doubtless laid down the brass and intended to be interred beneath it. Even if she had other “unhappy brother” being George, Duke of Clarence, and father of the Countess Margaret; apparently some arrangement existed between the brothers and the Duke of Clarence, and his wife the Lady Isabel Neville appears to have occupied the Castle for a time, and during this sojourn their daughter was born. This must have been a temporary occupancy only, as the same year Richard, then King, gave it to the Duke of Norfolk, who apparently held it until his death in 1485.

married very young, she would have been in extreme old age in 1487, as the words ven'l d'na would imply.

V. William de Molyns,—(styled fifth, and last Baron) survived his father's death only four years, being slain at the siege of Orleans, 8 May, 1429, then aged twenty-three. He married Margaret, and left one daughter and heiress, Alianore, then three years of age. At his death he was seized of all the foregoing manors held by his father, and also Pengelley in St. Neot,—Polruan-Molyns in Lanteglos near Fowey, and Trengref in Cornwall, which presumably he must have succeeded to jure matris. It would be interesting to get the difficulty of the Whalesborough alliance solved, as also the correct parentage of the Duchess of Norfolk.

VI. Alianore de Molyns, only daughter and heiress,—she married first Sir Robert, third Lord Hungerford, and secondly Sir Oliver Manyngham.

Sir Robert Hungerford, third Baron, was one of the central figures of that noble but unfortunate race, the vast ramifications of whose family by descent, and territorial possessions, held such large influence over an extensive area comprised in the adjoining counties of Somerset, Wilts, Gloucester and Oxford.

He was the eldest son of Robert, second Baron Hungerford, of Farleigh-Hungerford, by his wife Margaret Botreaux, of North Cadbury, a heiress by descent to large possessions, as also to the Barony of Botreaux, and joint heiress to that of Moels.

He married before 19 Henry VI, 1441, and this date would agree with her age, recorded to be "when she was thirteen," his child-wife being the aforesaid Eleanor Molyns, the little orphan daughter of William Molyns, slain at Orleans in 1429, she being then only three years of age. But she was heiress to considerable possessions—which accounts for the desire to secure her, though of such tender age—as also to the Barony of Molyns, a title afterwards revived in her husband, who represented also in right of his mother, the abeyant baronies of Moels and Botreaux, honours subsequently restored to his descendants.

But all these worldly distinctions and wealth did not save him from misfortune; Sir Robert's life was a troublous one, and ended—as did so many of his race—disastrously on the scaffold. His wife during the twenty-two years of their married life, must have found it a period of considerable trial, and she could have seen comparatively but little of him, nor did her sorrows end with his death.

On 13 Jan., 1444-5, (to 20 Jan., 1451-2) he was summoned to Parliament, during his father's lifetime, as BARON MOLYNS, his wife being the sole representative of that honour. Subsequently he was in the French wars, serving under the Earl of Shrewsbury, and was taken prisoner after the unfortunate battle of Chastillon

25 July, 1453. Here he suffered an incarceration of seven years and four months, his energetic mother spending immense sums to procure his release. In 1459 his father died, during his imprisonment, and he succeeded to the title as BARON HUNGERFORD.

In 1460, on his arrival home, 38 Henry VI, that monarch :—

“In consideration of his services and his sufferings, gave him license to transport fifteen hundred sacks of wool, into any foreign parts, without custom of the same, as also to travel beyond sea, and to take as many with him in his company, with gold, silver, and other necessities as should be suitable to his degree, and on this occasion he travelled into Italy.”

Returning soon after, he became an active adherent of the Red Rose, fought at the battle of Towton 29 March, 1461, and fled afterward to York, joining Henry VI and accompanying him to Scotland. For this he was attainted by the first Parliament of Edward IV, but notwithstanding.—

“The king regarded his wife Alianore, and his younger children with such feelings of compassion, that he committed them to the keeping of Lord Wenlock, to whom he granted the attainted lord’s estate, for a fitting support.”

The Lancastrian cause being once more in the ascendant, Lord Hungerford was again found in their ranks, and with them at the battle of Hexham, 15 May, 1463, but the Yorkists were victorious, and he was taken prisoner, conveyed to Newcastle, where, in accordance with the savage reprisals of that period, he was beheaded. His body was brought to Salisbury, and buried in the Cathedral, and when the alterations in that edifice took place, a large flat stone was discovered, having the indent of a knight in full armour, his head on a helmet, and feet on a lion, with numerous shields and sickles, which was considered to be his memorial, doubtless laid down by his wife.

They had four children,—the eldest Sir Thomas, was of Rowdon, near Chippenham,—

“he sided for a while with Richard Nevill, Earl of Warwick, who then espoused the cause of Edward IV., but afterward falling off, and exerting his influence for the restoration of Henry VI., he was seized, and tried for his life at Salisbury, 8 Edward IV., 1469, and having had judgment of death as a traitor, was executed the next day.”

He married Anne daughter of Henry, Earl of Northumberland, and left one daughter Mary, sole heiress to all the accumulated properties that were unforfeited, and the dormant baronies of Moels, Botreaux and Molyns. She married Sir Edward Hastings, summoned to Parliament in 1483, as Baron Hastings of Hungerford, ob: 8 Nov., 1507, and secondly she married Sir Richard Sacheverell. 2. Sir Walter Hungerford; he lived at Heytesbury, and was “one of those who deserted Richard at Bosworth,”—to him Henry VII. in 1485 restored the possession of Farleigh Castle, which had been forfeited by the attainder of his brother in 1469, and by Edward IV. given to his brother Richard Duke of Gloucester, as previously noticed. He died in 1516. 3. Leonard,—and 4 Frideswide, a nun of Sion.

Lady Eleanor Hungerford, his widow, aged about thirty-four at his death, married secondly Sir Oliver Manyngham. She was buried at Stoke-Pogeis—the home of her family,—on the south side of the altar, where, on a large flat stone, is the indent of the figure of a woman, with a square portion beneath her feet for an inscription. From recorded evidence, (Lysons) the effigy represented a woman in a shroud, or winding sheet, with which the outline corresponds. Below the indent, and separate from it, on a narrow brass is this inscription :—

“Hic hoc sub lapide sepelitur corpus venerabilis domine Elenore Mullens, baronesse, quam primitius desponsavit dominus Robertus Hungerforde, miles et baro’, et hanc postea nupsit honorabilis dominus Oliverus Manyngham, miles,—quorum animabus propicietur Deus,—Amen.”

no date is given here, but she was living in 1469.

There were four shields at the corners of the stone, of these three remain, each charged with the modified arms subsequently adopted by Molyns, Paly wavy of six (or and gules). Apparently this gravestone is a memorial to two persons, the indent to the earlier, and inscription and shields to a later one,—query if the earlier was to her mother?

There is a fine ogee canopied and crocketed monument, with supporting pinnacles, in the north wall of the chancel at Stoke-Pogeis, referable to the middle of the fourteenth century, but there is no tomb or effigy now within it, arms or inscription. George Hastings, first Earl of Huntingdon,—son of Edward, Lord Hastings. by his wife Mary Hungerford, grand daughter and sole heiress of Eleanor Molyns,—who died 24 March, 1544, was buried in the chancel at Stoke-Pogeis, but there is no monument to his memory. The Arms of Hastings are sculptured on the south porch.

185. HAWKCHURCH, DORSET—PETITION AGAINST AN ALEHOUSE.—In MSS. Harl., No. 6583, fo. 568, is a petition by inhabitants of Hawkchurch, Dorset, to Chief Justice Finch, on the Western Circuit, praying that no Ale-house be allowed to be licensed for the said parish.

The Petition sets forth that :—"The s^d parish is no throughfare for Travellers, and for many years hath had no ale house within it. During which time the inhabitants lived very civilly. Howbeit of late, upon pretence of the poore's better reliefe, the Justices did licence an Ale house in the s^d p^{ish}. But the opinion held of it for the poore's convenience hath p^{ved} the cause of much inconvenience and disorder. For divers idle dissolute persons of other p^{shes} resorting thither have allured many of the said p^{ish} and drawn them to their society, insomuch that divers families within the said p^{ish} are in a short time impov^{ished} and brought to baseness and beggary and many p^{ticular} p^{sons} corrupted and become unruly by reason of this Alehouse, as we verily believe."

The petition goes on to state that on complaint of the above to the Justices, the Alehouse was by them suppressed, whereupon the frequenters of it have given out that they "will make it a common Inne (let the Justices do what they can and yf it cost them 40l.)" in which case petitioners expect to see no "good effects," especially as the house which it is sought "under the name of an Inne, to make a house of disorder (as it hath been, being of late an unlicensed Ale house) is or Churchhouse and the Inne keep, one for his ill demean^r very lately mittmus' by the Justice to the Bridewell."

And petitioners pray the Chief Justice not to grant any such licence but to leave the matter to the Justices of the Peace "who will know the truth of their petition."

The petition is signed by 20 signatories, including John Crandon, the curate, and various others bearing names still surviving in Hawkchurch and the neighbourhood, such as Bowditch, Pynny, Cogan, &c.

Sir John Finch was Chief Justice of the Common Pleas between 1634 and 1639. It does not appear what befell after the petition was presented. Mr. Crandon, was probably a Puritan divine. He corresponded in Latin with Sir Simonds Dewes, at that time the non-resident owner of the Manor of Coaxden in the adjoining Parish of Chardstock. L. B. C.

187. WILLIAM DYER, A SOMERSET ROYALIST IN NEW ENGLAND. Concluded. (VI. xlvi. 152, xlvii. 171).—But the last and tragic chapter in William Dyer's life concerned his wife, Mary, whose inconceivable experiences at the hands of the Massachusetts Bay authorities were detailed in my first note on this subject. Mary Dyer sailed for England, according to a letter from Coddington to Governor Winthrop, in 1650, by "the first ship with Mr. Travice." Her husband, detained by his suit against Coddington, sailed nearly a year later. He returned to Newport four years before his wife, who had in the meantime become a Quaker, and was a minister of that faith when, in 1657, she returned to Boston on her way to Newport. Promptly arrested in Boston and there imprisoned, she was released upon her husband's intercession, and he had leave to take her home to Newport, but was "bound in a great penalty not to lodge her in any town of the colony, nor to permit any to have speech with her in the journey." Much of William Dyer's energy had lately been expended in the building of a suitable house at Newport, and he was permitted to have his family there during 1657-59. But early in the latter year, his wife, filled no doubt with added indignation against the Massachusetts government of that time because of the wanton and superstitious cruelty with which she had been pursued by their predecessors in 1637, insisted upon returning to bear witness again in Boston to her faith. This resulted in her condemnation to death along with Marmaduke Stephenson and William Robinson, on October 31st, 1659. She was taken to execution and reprieved when the rope was already around her neck, at the instance of her second son William Dyer, Junior, a youth just in his early twenties, who was at the time captain of a coasting ship.

I find in the Bodleian Library a printed broadsheet, bound up under the title "Quakers" and with the shelf reference "Wood 645" which runs as follows:—

"A DECLARATION (*) | of the | GENERAL COURT | of the |
| MASSACHUSETTS | Holden at Boston in New England, October 18, 1659.
Concerning | the Execution of two Quakers.

Although the justice of our proceedings against William Robinson, Marmaduke Stephenson and Mary Dyer, Supported by the Authority of this Court, the Lawes of the Country; and the Law of God, may rather perswade us to expect encouragement from all prudent and pious men, then convince us of any necessity to Apologize for the same, yet for as much as men of weaker parts, out of pitty and commiseration (a commendable and Christian virtue yet easily abused and susceptible of sinister and dangerous impressions) for want of full information, may be less satisfied, & men of perverser principles, may take occasion hereby to calumniate us, and render us as bloody persecutors, to satisfie the one and stop the mouths of the other, we thought it requisite to declare. That about three years since divers persons professing themselves Quakers (of whose pernicious Opinions and Practices we had received intelligence from good hands, from Barbadoes to England,) arrived at Boston, whose persons were only secured to be sent away by the first opportunity, without censure or punishment, although they professed tenents, turbulent and contemptuous behaviour to Authority would have justified a severer animadversion, yet the prudence of this Court was exercised onely in making provision to secure peace and order here established against their attempts whose design (we were well assur'd of by our own experience, as well as by the example of their predecessors in Munster) was to undermine and ruin the same, And accordingly a Law was made and published prohibiting all Masters of Ships to bring any Quakers into this jurisdiction and themselves from coming in on penalty of the House of Correction till they could be sent away. Notwithstanding which by a back Door they found entrance, and the penalty inflicted on themselves, proving insufficient to restrain their impudent and insolent obtrusions, was increased by the loss of the ears of those that offended the second time, which also being too weak a defence against their impetuous fanatick fury, necessitated us to endeavour our security, and upon serious consideration after the former experiments, by their incessant assaults, a Law was made that such persons should be banished on pain of Death, according to the example of England in their provision against Jesuites, which sentence being regularly pronounced at the last Court of Assistants against the parties above named, and they either returning or continuing presumptuously in this jurisdiction, after the time limited, were apprehended, and owning themselves to be the persons banished, were sentenced (by the Court) to death, according to the Law aforesaid which hath been executed upon two of them: Mary Dyer upon the petition of her Son and the mercy and clemency of this Court, had liberty to depart within two dayes, which she hath accepted of.

The consideration of our gradual proceeding, will vindicate us from the clamorous accusations of severity; our own just and necessary defence calling upon us (other means fayling) to offer the poynt, which these persons have violently, and wilfully rushed upon, and thereby become felons de se, which might it have been prevented and the Sovereign Law Salus populi been preserved, our former proceedings, as well as the sparing Mary Dyer, upon an inconsiderable intercession, will manifestly evince, we desire their lives absent, rather then their death present.

† No traces exist of the original printing in New England here alluded to. Possibly the notion that this document was a reprint arose in England, where its apologetic temper would excite no surprise.

Mary Dyer's answer to this, written the day after her reprieve was: "Once more to the General Court in Boston speaks Mary Dyer even as before: My life is not accepted nor availeth me in comparison of the lives and liberty of the truth." How she went a round-about way from Boston to Shelter Island,—off the extreme Eastern end of Long Island,—and tarried there for a time with other Quakers, under the protection of Nathaniel Sylvester, will be realized by those who have seen the monument erected some 16 years ago on Shelter Island by the late Professor Horsford. By the end of May, 1660, this intrepid woman again appeared in Boston and summoned authority there to execute their iniquitous law upon her, or else to abolish it. In spite of the eloquent plea from her husband, which is subjoined, Mary Dyer was hanged from a tree, which only perished in 1879. But she had her way, for, within a year, Charles II. required the abolition of the death penalty against Quakers.

GEO. S. FRY.

[The Editors cannot allow this series of Dorset Administrations, extending from 31st Dec., 1559, to 31st Dec., 1725, to be brought to a conclusion without expressing their grateful thanks to Mr. Fry for his contributions to their pages, which he commenced sending in March, 1890. As the period now reached is comparatively modern, it has been thought well to conclude the series with the year 1725, and at the completion of the present volume of S. & D. N. & Q.]

189. MOELS FAMILY. (VI. xlvi. 167.)—In the interesting account of the Moels Family which Mr. Rogers has given us, may I call his attention to some monuments in St. German's Church, Cornwall, to a family of the name of Moyle? A small property called Bake in that Parish seems to have passed by marriage to the Moyle Family temp. Edward 3rd, and to have remained in that family for many generations. These monuments record the death of Richard Moyle, Thomas Moyle (speaker of the House of Commons under Hen. VIII.) and Robert Moyle, whose will is dated 1604, Joseph Moyle, ob. 1661, and Sir Walter Moyle who died 1701. There was also a Walter Moyle who died 1721; he was Member for Saltash, temp. William III, and appears to have been a distinguished literary Character. The arms of Moyle are Gu. a. moyle (mule) passant or. I am indebted for these particulars of the Moyle Family to Historical Notices of St. Germans, by the Rev. Henry Furneaux.

I ought to add that the Moyles are supposed to have sprung from an old Kentish family, and to have moved to Cornwall by marriage.

W. DAUBENY.

190. PARISH PALL.—Some 20 years ago it was in all-but-universal use in this parish for funerals of the labouring folk—the case is very different now. The last occasion of its use was in 1895 and the occasion before that was 1887.

JAMES CROSS,
Vicar of Sturminster Marshall.

191. AN EARLY SOMERSET WILL.—[Add. Charter. 28766.]—The following is interesting as containing a rare mention of the Chapel of S. Algar, once existing in what is now the parish of Woodlands, Frome-Selwood, and still preserved in memory in the name of a small farmhouse there, built out of part of its remains.

E. M. THOMPSON.

[Attention was called to St. Algar's in S. & D. N. & Q. Vol. IV, p. 119. The farm house is evidently in part an ancient building, though the alterations effected for modern purposes made it hard to suggest any date—(one may conjecture vaguely 14th or 15th century)—or to say whether the popular designation of chapel correctly describes the large room now used in part as cellar. The house stands hard by a stream, one of the many small tributaries of the Frome. A little way above the farm house on the county boundary is St. Algar's water, which is numbered separately in the Tithe Map. Collinson speaks of the Manor of Langley, ii. 189.

192. CAUNDLE PURSE, A TERRIER OF 1612.—In the Salisbury Diocesan Gazette, for August 1899, pp. 168-170, I printed an alphabetical list of the names of the parishes in Wilts of which there are Terriers preserved in the Diocesan Registry, Salisbury, hoping that it would be of some use and interest to Incumbents in that county. I stated that the Terriers preserved in the Registry referred only to parishes in Wiltshire and Berkshire, Dorsetshire not being included in the Diocese of Salisbury between the years 1542 and 1836. I have since been going carefully through the bundles seriatim, and have unexpectedly found a Terrier of the parish of Caundle Purse, dated 14 October, 1612, which Canon Mayo thinks worth printing in the pages of S. & D. N. & Q., and has kindly made the following copy of.

It is preserved, with seventeen other loose separate papers, in the bundle labelled "B."

29 Sept., 1899.

193. DORSET MEN'S GRAVES ABROAD. (VI. xlv. 123, xlv. 161.)—The Dorchester entry (xlv. 161), dated June 4, 1656, cannot relate to the widow of the Fudge buried at Batticaloa (xlv. 123), inasmuch as that Fudge is described as the servant of one of the earlier British Governors, and there was no British Governor prior to 1796, the year in which we took possession of the Dutch Settlements on the Coast.

194. "PROFITS OF THE PRAYES."—(II. xi. 86.) As an illustration of the practice of "the driving of the prey," I enclose a cutting from the Hants Observer of June 17, 1899.

JAMES COLEMAN.

STOCKBRIDGE.

On Friday the Common Marsh was 'driven' under the superintendence of Mr. H. W. Lancashire, the Lord of the Manor. The town crier announced that the driving would take place at five o'clock, when all persons were requested to own their catle.

Many persons assembled at the appointed time. The driving being completed the owning of the cattle was proceeded with, resulting in the end that five heifers, three horses, and five colts were unclaimed. These were 'impounded' and taken charge of by the Lord of the Manor. We learn that on the following day they were claimed by Mr. Browning, of Hoplands, King's Somborne. The fees and expenses being paid by the owner, the cattle and horses were handed over to him. It is some fifteen years or more since the last and similar 'driving' took place.

195. PORTUS DE RADECLIVE. (VI. xlv.73.)—In the Liber Henrici de Soliaco, Abbot of Glastonbury, A.D. 1189 p. 77, under the heading of "Limplesham," there is the following reference to the above.

"Britius tenet V. acras versus radeclivum." The parish of Lymppsham is bounded on the north by the river Axe, on which the "portus de Radeclive" is situated.

196. A GUIDE TO THE ABBEY CHURCH OF S. MARY, OF SHERBORNE, 1899. 6d. Title + pp. 32, Demy 16mo. (Bennett, Sherborne.) This is an account of Sherborne Church, taken from Wildman's Short History of Sherborne, for the benefit of visitors, and needs no more than the mention of the author to recommend it to their attention.

197. THE BRIDPORT RECORDS. These are appearing from time to time in the Bridport News, under the editorship of Mr. Thos. Wainwright, and reprints of the articles (of which some thirty-five have already been issued) may be obtained of Messrs. Frost & Son, Bridport, at 3d. each. We are glad to hear that this good work is making progress.

198. FIRST ANNUAL REPORT ON THE SOILS OF DORSET. August, 1899. Pp. 44, Demy 8vo. 1sh. We have here a report of the analysis of 20 samples of soil in Dorset, by D. A. Gilchrist, B. Sc., and C. M. Luxmore, D. Sc., F.I.C., of Reading College, which cannot fail to be of use to those concerned in Dorset Agriculture. We notice some imperfections in the rendering of local names, e.g., p. 32, Winnow's Gap for Wynneards Gap, p. 35, Pomp hill for Pamp hill, p. 36, Marlstone Magna for Marston Magna.

The Editors of 'Notes and Queries for Somerset and Dorset' will welcome, for insertion in that periodical, suitable notices relating to the History and Antiquities of those Counties, such as records of the discovery of prehistoric, Celtic, Roman, Saxon or mediæval relics, accurate copies of, or extracts from MSS. in the Public Record, or other government offices, from Diocesan, County, Municipal, or Parish Registers or documents, Churchbooks, Court-rolls, or monumental inscriptions, together with Biographical notices of County Worthies and writers, as well as Bibliographical particulars of their works, memoranda of local Dialects, Legends, Folk-lore, &c. They also especially invite queries on points of interest, in connection with the same Counties.

The Editors do not undertake to return unsuitable communications.

All communications should be written on one side of the paper only, in a legible hand; and uncommon proper names, or obsolete words, should be inscribed in Roman capitals, to assist the printers. Letters requiring a reply should contain a postage stamp.

When reference is made to Articles which have appeared in earlier Parts of the Magazine, the Volume, Part, and Number of the Article should be cited: thus, (I. i. 17.) would be the index to "Catty Lane."

Contributors, wishing to have spare copies of the Parts containing their communications, must inform the Editors of their desire at the time their communications are sent in. The charge will be 1s. 3d. each, post free.

Vol. I. (Parts i-viii), Vol. II. (Parts ix-xvi), Vol. III. (Parts xvii-xxiv), Vol. IV. (Parts xxv-xxxii), and Vol. V. (Parts xxxiii-xl), can now be supplied to Subscribers for 10s. each.
